TOBACCO TRADE IN MARYLAND, 1700-1725.

By PAUL R. KELBAUGH

“When Charles the First, long since came hither,
In stormy and tempestuous weather,
With Royal Grant, to settle here,
A province worthy of his care;
Leaving behind, to raise up seed,
And tend a Stinking Indian weed,
Scotch, English and Hybernians wild,
From Sloth and Idleness exiled,
Tobacco then no duty paid;
But time has almost sunk the trade
And Imposts on our Staple laid,
From scorching Africa’s burnt Shore
Brought Aethiopian Slaves great Store
More Weeds turn out, to heat inured
Than by the Populace are cured,
Makes it a drug, as merchants feel,
Whose chance it is in Trash to deal,
Fit only to manure the Earth.”¹

Thus, in a very cursory manner does one Ebenezer Cook, writing in 1708, trace the history of Maryland. We must understand, however, that the poem was a satire, and the inspired writing of an English Merchant's representative, who had left his home in the old country and had come to live for a while in the crude settlement of Maryland. Yet though it be an extremely pessimistic view of the tobacco trade, it serves to impress, more effectively for that very reason, the fact that the period in Maryland History which we are to contemplate, was one of leanness and poverty. Before going into the causes and results of the conditions prevailing in the early eighteenth century we want to find out how tobacco came to be the great staple product of two of the largest colonies in America.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND.

Tobacco was first discovered by Christopher Columbus in the island of Cuba, where it grew wild, the natives smoking it either in reeds or rolled in the form of cigars. It was introduced commercially into Europe about the middle of the sixteenth century.² Spanish merchants brought it into Europe from the West Indies about the year 1558. A European market had therefore been in existence for about fifty years before permanent settlements were made in America. At the opening of the seventeenth century its sale in England was large enough to arouse anxiety among the Bullionists, who, according to the accepted mercantile theory of the times, hated to see the precious metal leave the country in exchange for a worthless weed. The growth of the trade is suggested by the fact that by 1601 certain individuals thought it worth while to buy a monopoly on the manufacture and sale of tobacco pipes. It remained for the American colonists to take advantage of the existing market and develop it still further.

The colony of Virginia was the first to introduce the cultivation of the fragrant weed, and John Rolfe, the husband of Pocahontas, inaugurated its systematic cultivation in the colony in 1612. Scharf tells us, however, that "the custom of smoking tobacco was universal among the tribes at the time of the first arrival of the whites. With them, however, tobacco was a sacred herb, a precious gift of the Great Spirit, and the smoking of it always took on something of the nature of a rite or ceremony.”³ Each village had its large and ornamental “peace-pipe,” used in the reception of visitors to determine whether or not their motives were peaceful. In the year 1616 Captain George Yeardley, Deputy Governor, first directed the attention of the colonists to planting it for profit. Its success as a profitable crop seems to have been instantaneous and constant in the lower colony.

REASONS FOR ITS SUCCESS AS A STAPLE.

When Maryland was first settled, almost twenty years after the Virginian colonists first started the commercial growing of tobacco, the colonists found there a deep soil of rich, black loam, so fertile in fact that, according to a contemporary writer, English wheat would not grow until Indian corn or tobacco was first planted to take off some of the rankness.⁴ It was not, therefore, because the soil was unfavorable to the growth of grain that so little planting was done; it was because it was still easier and far more profitable to grow tobacco. In the first years of the settlement the colonists began to plant this commodity to the exclusion of corn, preferring to buy their grain from the Indians or to import it from other colonies rather than plant it themselves. The colonial government made great efforts to prevent the exclusive production of tobacco by decreeing that everyone who planted it should grow also two acres of corn. This law was renewed several times, until 1654, and was then allowed to lapse, probably because the colony had been induced to support itself in ordinary years. Edward Randolph stated in 1676, however, that New England sent food-stuffs—peas, flour, biscuit, malt, codfish, and mackerel—to Maryland in exchange for tobacco.

In order to encourage the growth of tobacco in her own colonies, England, in 1621, enacted a law practically prohibiting the importation of foreign tobacco by levying discriminating duties in favor of colonial tobacco and against all foreign tobacco.⁵ The Spanish trade at this time had amounted to 60,000 pounds annually. Speaking of this duty on foreign tobacco, Chalmers says, "this is the first instance of the modern policy of promoting the importation of the commodities of the colonies in preference to the production of foreign nations." This policy was further reinforced by prohibiting the cultivation of tobacco in England and in Ireland. It is interesting to note how, about this time, the mind of the average Englishman was completely turned around. When the colonists first began the growth of tobacco, the home country and provincial governments as well, frowned on the enterprise for ethical reasons if for none other. But after the duties collected from its importation in England had begun to augment the annual revenue, encouragement of its growth became a fixed policy of the government.

The proclamation against home-grown tobacco and the exclusion of foreign resulted in the practical monopoly of the home market by colonial tobacco and in the establishing of the trade as a permanent feature in the life of the Virginia colony. Therefore, although tobacco in Virginia had fallen in value from three shillings a pound, the price fixed in 1619, to less than two pence in 1630, and after that time fluctuated around six pence, it had still proved itself, because of its sure market in England, the only crop that could be grown with profit. So the Maryland colonists, too, when they discovered that their extremely fertile soil was almost as favorable for the growth of the plant as that of Virginia, turned exclusively to the production of tobacco. Before 1640 it had become the staple of Maryland as it had become already that of Virginia.

SLAVERY AND TOBACCO-RAISING.

The commonly accepted belief is that slavery and tobacco-raising were twin developments in America, the one making the other possible. It is possible, as I shall try to show, that either would have been a success without the other; yet certainly it is true that eventually the two were inextricably combined. Certainly tobacco growing before 1619 in Virginia did not depend on slaves, since until that time there were none in America. Yet in 1619 the tobacco crop was a relatively large one, being estimated at 20,000 pounds.⁶ For the first fifty years or more white indented or apprentice labor was more important in Maryland and Virginia than slave labor. As late as 1671 there were in Virginia three white indented apprentices to one negro slave, or six thousand of the former to two thousand of the latter out of a total population of forty thousand. When, however, the white servant labor was cut off by the increasing demand for it in industrial work which required skilled labor, both in England and in the colonies, then cheap negro labor was a boon to the planters. So it may be said that, while the cultivation of tobacco did not in the first instance depend upon slave labor, its expansion in the eighteenth century did rest upon it. It was a fortunate coincidence for the American planter that, as white labor became scarcer and dearer, negro slave labor became more plentiful and cheaper. And what cheap slave labor did was to lower the cost of production and thereby cheapen the price of tobacco to the consumer, which in turn stimulated further consumption and cultivation. The consumer profited quite as much from slave labor as the producer.

The number of negroes brought into Maryland prior to 1700 was very small. Governor Nicholson wrote in a letter dated August 20, 1689: "There hath been imported this summer about four hundred and seventy odd negroes, viz, 396 in one ship direct from Guiny, 50 from Virginy, 20 from Pennsylvania which came thither from Barbadoes; a few others from other places. . . ." ⁷ The Governor was worried over so great an influx of negroes, who, he thought, could easily join with the Indians to great disadvantage to the white colonists. In the next ten years, almost 3000 were brought in. In 1712 there were in the colony nearly 38,000 whites and over 8000 negroes.⁸ In three of the southern counties the whites were outnumbered. By 1750, the whites numbered probably 100,000, the blacks 40,000.

In order better to understand the tobacco trade in Maryland, it is necessary that we have some definite idea of its settlement, the kind of properties, the system of land grants, and something of the living conditions at the time of which we are studying.

LAND SYSTEM.

The system of land tenure resembled somewhat that of Virginia, which called for two classes of proprietors. First were those who imported a large number of laborers, receiving not less than 1000 acres. Their tenure varied according to the time of emigration. Those who came over the first year (1634) received for every five men imported, 2000 acres at an annual quitrent of 400 pounds of wheat. For those coming the next two years the quitrent was raised to 600 pounds of wheat and the number of laborers to 10. These estates were created manors, and the proprietors given the right to hold courts baron and courts leet.

The other class was the small land holder. Each man was given 100 acres for himself, 100 acres for his wife and each child, and 50 acres for every man servant or maid under 40 years. The rents varied according to the time of emigration, from 10 to 60 pounds of tobacco.⁹

In 1683 the transportation of settlers ceased to be the basis for the granting of land, which was thereafter obtainable only on the payment of a purchase price, called "caution money," of 200 pounds of tobacco per 100 acres. This was raised in 1684 to 240 pounds, which rate was doubled during the royal period (1692-1715). In 1717 the purchase price was changed to money at the rate of one penny for each pound of tobacco, making 40 shillings sterling per 100 acres.¹⁰

LIFE IN THE COLONY.

There are, then, two distinct classes or gradations of society from the beginning among the planters of Maryland¹¹ and life in the two classes presented just as wide a variation as exists today, let us say, between the average small farmer's life and that of a wealthy bank president.

It must have been into the house of a small landholding planter that Ebenezer Cook chanced to come when he arrived in Maryland as the factor for an English merchant. He describes the house as a small one-story affair containing only a kitchen and bedroom. Through a door leading from the kitchen, access was given to a lean-to in which the smaller live stock was housed. He appeared greatly impressed by the appearance of his host who was tall, bronzed, unkempt, barefooted, and dressed in coarse blue linen shirt and breeches. The wife, too, was scarcely more a treat for the eyes, being dressed in clothes of a coarse material, and in a very slovenly manner as well. The food, while bountiful, was hardly worthy of being called delicious. His fare consisted of goat's or cow's milk, mush, hominy, and cider-pap; the dishes were wooden, when indeed dishes were used. Rum in great quantities was always on hand to assist in getting the food down where tasteful preparation failed.¹² This picture, however, must be modified, since it was painted not as history but as a satire.

In contrast to this was the home and life of the well-to-do planter. Some of these planters were cavaliers and others well-to-do men who had come over to Maryland to start anew in a region unhampered by religious laws and bickering. They emulated to a degree the conditions to which they were accustomed in England, but of course had not the implements and means to build houses such as they could have had at home. An average house might contain four or five rooms—the living room floor covered with sand; the doors of massive oak boards and window frames of the same heavy material. There would be a long winding staircase, because the ceilings in the rooms were high. There would likely be a narrow porch with four or five big white pillars reaching two stories high. A road would lead away from the manor house through several gateways to the general highway several hundred yards from the house. The lord of the manor was usually a man not accustomed to much work,—who rather lived a life of ease and pleasure, entrusting the actual overseeing of his plantation work to a white freeman. Women mixed very little in society. Horse racing and cockfighting were typical of the sports enjoyed by the gentlemen.¹³ Drinking was common, even extending to the legislature, so that at times a meeting had to be adjourned, if we can put credence in the story of Ebenezer Cook.¹⁴ The famous southern Maryland and Eastern shore hospitality likely had its rise at this early time, and was due more to loneliness and separation than to any native instinct. In winter many of the wealthier planters moved with their families to Annapolis—the political and social center of the province after 1689.

AN ENGLISH VIEW.

From the account written by Dalby Thomas, an Englishman, published in 1690, we get very likely an intimate picture of the growth of tobacco in the Chesapeake Colonies at this time. It is valuable, too, in giving a slant on the light in which England viewed her tobacco colonies. For that reason I quote at some length.¹⁵ “To make and manage a Virginia or Maryland plantation for tobacco, every hand employed therein must be furnished with an ax, a saw, and instruments for felling timber, and grubbing up its roots. When the ground is cleared of trees and rubbish, then it is broke up with houghs and afterwards with those, and spades, brought into a little hillock, like those moles turn up, into every one of which is placed one plant, so that they grow about three, four and five feet asunder. The tobacco plants are raised from seed sowed in nurseries of hot-beds, skillfully prepared for that purpose in the months of January, February, March and April, and are drawn thence and planted in the prepared little hills in the months of May and June, and will be ready for cutting in July or August following. But all the while from its planting, it is carefully to be watched, and every plant, that is perceived to be dying must be taken away, and a fresh one set in the hill. . . . Plants are subject to be eaten by a worm so that whole crops are sometimes destroyed.

“When it is cut it is carried into the curing house, where it is hanged plant by plant at an equal distance till it becomes powder-dry; at which time of the year that country is subject to great fogs and mists, which makes it become waxy, and, if it rises again, then it is fully cured and is ready to be casked. All sweet-scented requires about three weeks’ time, and Oronoco about six weeks’ time; and in about three weeks’ more after its casking it shows itself whether it be well-cured or no; for, ‘tho’ the experienced planter knows certainly whether his tobacco be well-cured or ill-cured, the purchaser cannot, and may be wronged if he buys it in less than three weeks time after its casking; for if it had not been perfectly dried, it will certainly rot, perish, and become good for nothing . . . They ship it out from the month of October till April following.”

DISPOSING OF THE TOBACCO.

Most of the well-to-do planters had their own wharves along rivers where boats loaded and unloaded. Often runways, or timber-bottom roads were built leading down to the wharf, over which hogsheads of tobacco were rolled by the slaves.

The poorer planters did not raise enough tobacco to warrant their own wharves, and would take their tobacco to a public wharf. Up to the passing of the Navigation Acts the colonists had enjoyed an unrestricted market; however, by those acts they were compelled to trade only with the Mother Country or her colonies, and to carry their goods in vessels of the same. So that after 1660 the main market was England, with some small trade with the New England merchants, who brought food-stuffs—peas, flour, biscuit, malt, codfish, mackerel, rum, and stores—in exchange for tobacco. We will confine ourselves, for that reason, mainly to a consideration of the trade between Maryland and the English merchants.

There were two ways in which the Maryland planter sold his crop.¹⁶ The first was to ship it, at his own risk or insured, to a commission merchant in England, trusting the merchant to sell it for him at a price which would pay the freight, the duties, and the commission, besides insuring a profit for himself. The merchant then returned European goods to the colonial exporter to the value of what he thought the profit on the tobacco consigned to him would be. If, however, he was later forced to sell at a loss, or contracted a bad debt, the loss was the planter's and the latter fell into a debt to the merchant. This would force him to sell his next crop to the same merchant in an effort to clear himself. If that, too, were not profitable, the poor planter might easily, and indeed very often did, become very heavily indebted to his London firm. This was the way in which many merchants preferred to trade. A paper in the British Museum shows how small the exporter's profit would be by this method, even in a favorable year. A hogshead of tobacco in England about 1730 brought twenty-one pounds, ten shillings; of this amount the duty was reckoned at sixteen pounds, the freight at four pounds, and the merchant's commission at fifteen shillings, leaving the planter himself a net profit of fifteen shillings. The president of the Council of Maryland, writing home to the Board of Trade in 1710, said:

¹⁶ M. S. Morris, Maryland Trade, 1689-1715, p. 373.

“The Generallity of the Planters, especially such as have shipped their Tobo's to their correspondents in London are becoming Greatly Indebted to the Merchants, and very many of their plantations and stocks are wholly mortgaged and forfeited to them, and others Dayly Desert their Abodes for feare of being imprisoned and repair to the southern Colonys, viz. South and North Carolina or Elsewhere to seek New Settlements.”

The other method of selling the annual crop was to dispose of it as it stood packed in the Plantations, either to the merchants' factors living there (of which I shall say more presently), or to the ship-captains who carried it to England. Most of the outport vessels purchased their ladings in this manner. This method was more certain for the planter, but gave him no opportunity to take advantage of any possible rise in the market at home. On the whole whether the colonist sold his tobacco in England or as it stood packed in the colony, the price which he received for it was a low one, even in good years not much more than sufficient to pay him for the expense of growing it, and hardly enough for him to support himself and family. Many of the richer planters shipped their tobacco directly to certain firms in England and received in exchange their own consignments of European goods.

The poorer planters did not raise enough tobacco to pay for the expense of shipping it to England. Therefore the English merchants had to buy it while it was still in the colony and pay for it with goods sent to Maryland at their own risk. Under these circumstances they did not try to sell their imported goods or cargo at once, because in that way they could not have demanded as much for their goods as they otherwise could. Instead, therefore, of attempting to sell immediately, the English traders usually employed factors, or local representatives. Bruce says that after 1624 there were few London merchants who could be called casual dealers, that is dealers who were without representatives in the colonies, to whom their goods could be consigned to be disposed of gradually. The casual dealer had to rely on the chance of selling his commodities as he passed in his ship, from river to river. There were objections to this from the point of view, at least, of the merchant. He, being in the colony only a short time, had to hasten his voyage back to England to reduce the cost attendant upon the navigation of his ship, and was, therefore, compelled to sell in order to secure a cargo of tobacco, whether its price was high or low. This plan, then, involved a double disadvantage to the merchant: he had to sell his cargo of imported articles at a low price, and to pay a higher price for his tobacco, both due to his limited stay in the colony.¹⁷

FACTORS.

The proper thing to do, as Captain Devries wrote as early as 1635, as a result of his own observations, was that all who conveyed supplies to the colonies with the object of exchanging them for tobacco, should erect private storehouses to be placed in the care of a factor, who should be required to remain in the colony in order to be prepared, at the proper season, to take possession of the crops of the planters to whom goods had been sold on credit, not improbably twelve months beforehand. This factor received the consignment of goods sent by the merchant, and gradually disposed of it, throughout the year, to advantage. He represented his employer further in receiving and shipping tobacco paid in return, and in the payment of all money or other bills due the merchant. The factor was usually very efficient in his transactions, due possibly to the fact that his recompense was in the form of a commission on the business transacted.

English merchants who supplied the planters with manufactured articles may be roughly divided into two classes: first, those who resided in the Mother Country and disposed of goods to the colonists either directly upon the receipt of the tobacco in England, or who shipped goods to the colonists to be sold there by their factors; secondly those who lived either permanently or temporarily in the colonies and exchanged the commodities which they had ordered for the products of the country, acting either in their own persons or through local representatives in their different mercantile transactions.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

For most part, as I have said, a transaction between an English merchant and a planter consisted in the delivering of manufactured goods by the former to the value of the tobacco which was sold by the planter. Very seldom was currency given outright by the merchant, since such practice was out of harmony with the bullionists' wishes, and hence contrary to the Mercantile Theory, whereby a balance of trade is always to be held by the country concerned, and whereby gold comes into the country rather than goes out. The other method of transaction was by use of the Bill of Exchange, and indeed this is the one we find in use a great deal of the time. Bills of exchange were used only when the parties who gave them had a balance to their credit in the hands of some merchant, the drawee being generally a person of this calling residing in England, New England, Barbados, or some other English colony. An illustration, given by Bruce, of a circumstance under which a bill of exchange might be offered, will serve to explain their use.

"A Foreign or native trader who was engaged in buying and selling Maryland tobacco purchased a large quantity of this commodity; instead of making payment in some form of merchandise or in money sterling, he delivered a bill of exchange drawn on a merchant who lived in England or in one of the colonies, as the case might be. The person receiving the bill transmitted it to his own correspondent in England, New England, or Barbados, with instructions to collect it and devote the sum of money thus obtained to the purchase of such commodities as he might designate, or he directed that his correspondent should hold it subject to future orders. Very often the same bill of exchange passed through a dozen or more hands before finally reaching the merchant on whom it was drawn, much as a coin or check today does.

"The Bill of Exchange was drawn in general in the form of three duplicates, one of which was very often entered on record in the country in which the bill itself was given. It was to be met twenty, thirty or forty days after presentation to the drawee. It could be transferred, being made payable to order. As the risk of protest was always present, it is not surprising to find that precautions were taken to ensure the payment of the amounts represented by requiring the delivery of collateral security. In private transactions the security most frequently consisted of a bond in which the person delivering the bill bound himself to pay double the amount in case it were protested."¹⁸ By a Maryland law of 1715, no more than twenty per cent damages, with costs, could be allowed on any protested bill of exchange,¹⁹ not more than one fee might be demanded of any one drawer of such bill, regardless of the number of endorsers on it at the time it was protested;²⁰ bills returned, protested, to the province of Maryland within eighteen months from date, should be allowed no more than fifteen per cent damages.²¹ To illustrate the practical use to which these bills of exchange were put, it is known that the provincial government in 1693 ordered George Plater, Collector of the Revenues, to produce bills of exchange to the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds, eight shillings, six pence. These bills, nine in number, were endorsed by the above mentioned George Plater and conveyed to Roger Newman, royal collector and Receiver for the Providence of New York, to be applied to the defence of that colony against the Indians. In April, 1694, Collector and Receiver General for New York, Chudleigh Brook, receipts the bills of exchange, and sends notice to the Maryland government of their receipt.²² The above bills of exchange were originally given to the Maryland government by ship captains as payment of duties, all were drawn on English merchants; except one which was drawn on a Boston merchant.

Attention thus far has been given to the general features of the tobacco trade in Maryland during the period in question. In the remaining part of the discourse, an attempt will be made to consider in more detail the questions, controversies, laws, etc., which actually belong to the period, together with conditions in both the old and new countries which have a direct bearing on the tobacco trade, making it just what it was. Before that is done, however, a few remarks of general significance should be made to give a clearer view of the relation between Maryland and Virginia. No attempt is made to go very far into this, however, since time will not permit, nor does the subject demand it. Allusions will be made to this relation, too, as we go along.

RELATION BETWEEN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA.

Maryland and Virginia raised almost all the tobacco that was raised at that time in the colonies. The ratio given by Dr. Margaret S. Morris is: Maryland 36% of total production, Virginia 64%. These figures she bases on records taken from the Custom House accounts, containing the combined exports, and compares them with those of Maryland, only, for the same period; she is able in this way to figure pretty closely. Virginia had been growing tobacco for twenty years when Maryland started, roughly 1616 and 1636 respectively. The tobacco grown mostly in Virginia was known as "sweet-scented" and was superior to the Oronoco tobacco grown in Maryland. For that reason people in England asked for Virginia leaf, which always enjoyed a better market than did Maryland tobacco. Laws passed in England concerning the tobacco trade in America concerned generally both colonies, excepting, of course, particular ordinances which covered a specific or local condition. Years of prosperity or depression generally paralleled in the two colonies. For these reasons it would seem that the two governments should try to enact laws that would work in harmony so as to protect their planters, if for no other reason. Indeed, various attempts were made to do this, but with surprisingly meager success. An illustration is given us from the Maryland Archives covering May 21, 1726, on which day Governor Charles Calvert and the Council, upon the petitions of the citizens for a tobacco law, wrote to the Governor and Council of Virginia for a draft of the bill they were then considering, so that some uniformity might be obtained in legislation.²³ They received a reply on June 25th, that the bill mentioned had been defeated in the House of Burgesses, mainly because their shipping would be restrained while the people of Maryland were at liberty to supply the markets at home at any season of the year. The letter rebuked the laws of Maryland which allowed the selling of new tobacco before the old was disposed of as one way in which the price was kept down. Another item on which they could never come to agreement, at least during this period, until forced to do so by act of the Queen, was in the matter of the gauge of the hogshead, or the size of the head, or end of the hogshead, which later brought about the cropping or cutting of hogsheads by ship captains. The trouble was due in part at least, to an export tax of two shillings per hogshead levied in 1679. Various estimates of the number of pounds contained in a hogshead are given, but it is likely that four hundred pounds was the average. Now, since duties were made payable on the hogshead, and the tobacco was sold by the pound, it was natural that planters and merchants would want to use as large a hogshead as possible. Maryland merchants claimed that the Oronoco, being a light, flaky leaf, would not pack nearly as tightly as the Virginia "sweet-scented" tobacco, so that they should be allowed to use a larger hogshead in order to get in the full four hundred pounds. To this the ship captains objected strenuously, saying that the ship hold was so made as to carry nicely and without waste space, a certain number of the hogsheads of the standard size used by Virginia planters, and that to avoid going back with a very small load and much waste space, the oversize hogsheads would have to be mashed or cut so as to pack. This practice in turn brought the Maryland planters to arms. In 1704 the Council of Maryland passed a law fixing the size of a hogshhead at "forty eight Inches in length and thirty two Inches in the Head," and it further stipulated "that in case any persons shall make Hogshheads of a larger Dimension he shall forfeit one hundred pounds of Tobacco for each Hogshhead so made."²⁴ In 1707 another act was passed, declaring "That Every Master of a Ship, taking Freight shall Give Bond with one Surety in the sum of two hundred pounds sterling, that he will not for that voyage, Cut, Crop, lessen, Diminish, impair, Deface any Tobacco Hogshheads taken on Board his Ship, or suffer the same to be done under the penalty of three pounds sterling for Every Hogshhead so Defaced." In June, 1711, Her Majesty instructs the Lords of Trade and Plantations to recommend to the next General Assembly the passing of laws preventing the cropping of tobacco hogshheads and for reducing the Maryland hogshheads to the size of those made in Virginia, and that the penalty for the breach of either of the said laws to be the same.²⁵ Just when real unity in the size of hogshheads and in other matters of common interest to the two provinces was accomplished is unknown; certainly not during the early eighteenth century.

Another point in which the Virginia colonists could not get coöperation was in the matter of overproduction and consequent lowering of the price. "In Maryland the question became a party issue between the large landowners in the Upper House, who could afford to cease planting for a year, and the small farmers, represented in the Lower House, whose livelihood was dependent on their annual crop, however low the price of it might be."²⁶ In this way selfishness prevented that coöperation within the colony and between the two colonies which would have gone far to relieve their condition.

The average annual export to other colonies during this period was about 320 hogsheads, an extremely small percentage of the total production. (By the Navigation Act of 1660, tobacco had to be sent either to England or to English plantations.)

From the above figures we are able to make several observations. Perhaps the most remarkable feature is that there is no gradual increase of production during the period, the year of the highest production being 1702. This can be attributed to the period of unrest and consequent loss of the European market brought on by the War of the Spanish Succession. The cause directly concerning the planter, however, was the very low price of tobacco, which was only $1\frac{3}{4}$ pence until 1711, when it advanced to $2\frac{1}{4}$ pence. But these causes are only a part of those contributing to make this a period of leanness in Maryland, and will be discussed at greater length later on.

It was mentioned earlier that England had changed her mind about the tobacco colonies, Maryland and Virginia. When a nation changes its policy so quickly and completely as England did, the cause is very likely to be pecuniary; this was so with England. These colonies, at first frowned on because they were producing no article of food, clothing or implements, were now looked on as the ideal colonies—furnishing raw materials which produced an occupation for laborers in England and which paid a high duty to the government; and supplying a market for English manufacturers. A further good feature of these colonists was that they required no coin in payment for their tobacco. The Board of Trade wrote to Governor Seymour, 1708-9, "We are glad to find, the Inhabitants of Maryland do not apply themselves to manufactures, which ought to be Imported from this Kingdom; and We doubt not but they will be Supply'd therewith from hence, that they will not need to turn their thoughts to anything but the Culture of Tobacco."²⁸ It is very easy to understand this anxiety of the home government to prevent manufacture and to encourage trade when the large number of royal duties placed on tobacco imported in England is considered and the amount of revenue they produced.

REVENUE FROM TOBACCO IN ENGLAND.

In 1660 Charles II received a duty of 1 penny per pound on entry and an additional penny payable nine months after importation. Then in 1685, in spite of opposition on the ground that further levy would discourage the trade, an additional impost of three pence per pound was levied, payable eighteen months after importation. In 1689 another subsidy raised the rate to six pence for William III. Finally, in 1703, Anne received from Parliament a one-third subsidy grant which made the duty now $6\frac{1}{3}$ pence per pound. One half of the first subsidy of a penny a pound and the whole of all the other duties were drawn back or refunded to the merchant who re-exported within twelve months any tobacco that had paid the duties. Roughly, however, tobacco that was consumed in England paid $6\frac{1}{3}$ pence per pound duties, while that re-exported was liable to a duty of one-half penny a pound, both duties materially lessened by various allowances. It is possible to indicate only generally the actual amount of such revenue. Dr. Morris estimates it at 350,000 pounds annually,²⁹ while Governor Seymour, writing to the Council of Trade and Plantations in 1708, says that in time of peace the duties resulting to the Crown, from colonial tobacco, "is annually above 400,000 pounds, exclusive of what is drawn back by debenture, on re-exportation."³⁰ The net income to the government was probably not far from 100,000 pounds. Of this revenue Maryland tobacco must have paid a little over one-third, or about 36,000 pounds.

COLONIAL REVENUE.

The most important of the tobacco duties through which the colonial government obtained its revenue was the export duty of two shillings per hogshead, first levied in 1671. One half was used for the support of the government, while the other half went to the proprietor. When the royal government was established in 1692 the proprietor was allowed to keep his half of the duty while three-fourths of the half for the support of the government was paid to the royal governor, and the remaining one-fourth for arms and ammunition.³¹ By a law passed in 1695 and re-enacted in 1696, 1701, 1704, 1708 and 1714, a second duty of three pence per hogshead on all tobacco exported was levied to go toward defraying the public charge.³² These two duties made the total two shillings and three pence on every hogshead shipped out of Maryland. Figuring the annual export of 25,000 hogsheads, then the income derived from the shilling duty which was entirely devoted to the support of the government each year, must have been about 1266 pounds. One-fourth of this, or about 316 pounds, ten shillings went toward arms and ammunition. The total revenue that accrued to the colonial government and to the proprietor from the export duties on tobacco in Maryland must have been about 3165 pounds per year. It was natural that the English authorities should demand regular accounts of their share of this revenue.

“Another source of revenue accrued from a duty laid, as in the case of the others, by the English Government, upon all tobacco exported to places other than England. This duty was a penny per pound, and since the average annual export of this trade we found to be about 320 hogsheads, or 128,000 pounds, this income was about 533 pounds. Of this the English government at first received one-fourth, one-half went to the collector, and the remaining fourth to the surveyor of the customs of Maryland. In 1694 it was decided that the money from this duty in Virginia and Maryland should be paid to the College of William and Mary in Virginia, and in the following year the salary of the collector for the collection of the penny a pound was lowered to twenty per cent, with one-third of all forfeitures. The duty of comptroller or surveyor of this account was assumed by the rector of the college, in order that its revenue might be increased. After this most of the penny a pound duty was paid to the college, but it never provided a very substantial source of income.”³³

REASONS FOR DEPRESSION IN MARYLAND.

It was mentioned earlier that the period we are studying was for one reason or another a period of hard times. We want now to review some of the causes for these and some suggested remedies for the evils. Leonard Calvert, writing to his brother in 1729, gives a very good description of the times, and a fair share of his letter will be quoted.³⁴ He says in part,

“Money or somewhat to answer its Current effects in Trade, is certainly much wanted here; we may Barter between one another our Staple Tobacco, but to carry on and Inlarge our trade Abroad and to Invite Artificers, Shipwrights, etc., to Settle Amongst us, another Species of Currency in payments, seems very desirable; New York, Pennsylvania, etc., are vastly improved in foreign trade, as well as home manufactures by a Paper Currency; It is that, in lieu of Specific Coin, which seems to give life, Expedition, and Ease to trade and Commerce; . . . in Virginia and Maryland the case is much otherwise. Tobacco, as our Staple, is our all, . . . it requires the Attendance of all our hands, and Exacts their utmost labor the whole year round. It requires us to abhorr Communitys and townships, since a Planter cannot Carry on his affairs without Considerable Elbowroom within his plantation: When All is done, and our Tobacco sent home, it is perchance the most uncertain Commodity that comes to market, and the management of it there, is of such a nature that it seems to be of all other, most lyable and subject to frauds, in prejudice to the poor planters; Tobacco Merchants, who deal in Consignments, get great Estates, run no risque, and Labour only with the Pen; the Planter can Scarce get a living, Runs all the risques attendant upon trade both as to his Negroes and Tobacco, and must work in variety of Labour.

“When our Tobacco then is Sold at home, whatever is the produce of it returns not to us in Money, But is either converted into apparel, Tools, or other Conveniences of life, or Else remains there as it were Dead to us, for where the Staple of a Country, upon foreign Sale, yields no return of Money to circulate in such a country, the Want of such Circulation must leave it almost inanimate; it is like a Dead Palsie on the Publick, since it can never Exert its faculties in the pursuit of trade and commerce; a country increasing and growing as this is, and a Staple, at best Uncertain, but of late visibly declining in Value, as Tobacco is; incites the people here to look about and Enlarge their foundation in trade, to the which Money or Some Currency, which may answer the same uses, is necessary, and the Expedient to such End, is a Paper Currency, as proposed in the Act.

“In short, the Traders who purchase Tobacco, bear the greatest Share from the Shoulders of the Planter; and yet it is as nothing to such trader; For, as Mr. Bennett a great and knowing trader here observes, the trader gets as much for his goods as he can, in Tobacco, having allways the whiphand of the Planters’ necessitys for cloaths and Tools, and when people are aiming at getting such advances on their goods, as from 100% to 200% the value of two shillings per Hogs-head Duty is scarce calculated or even thought of.”

No record tells of the issue of paper currency at this time in Maryland. It had been tried by the Government of Massachusetts around 1690. Efforts were made to increase the meagre supply of foreign gold and silver coins. A table establishing the rate of exchange for the various coins likely to find their way into Maryland was issued by order of the King in 1763,³⁵ while in 1729 an Act was passed by the Assembly and Council of Maryland for the encouragement of the bringing of gold and silver into Maryland by discounting 15% of certain import and export duties.³⁶ This lack of currency is used by Virginia House of Burgesses replying in 1701 to the Crown’s appeal to aid New York with men and money, as one of the several reasons why the two tobacco provinces should not respond. The report points out that most of the single men and poorer housekeepers would move to Carolina, where no quota was demanded, leaving the fighting to the free-holders and better housekeepers. In the absence of the latter, the slaves and servants would not raise half the usual crop, greatly to the detriment of Her Majesty’s revenues. It further states that the trade of Virginia and Maryland is of much greater consequence than that of New York, were the latter vastly better than it is.³⁷ In 1702 the same body tells of the difficulty of raising money. "We have no means of raising money but by impositions of goods imported and exported, on which commodities as export of tobacco is twenty times more than all the rest, and in laying anything upon that we are constrained to be very tender by occasion of the duty payable on the same in England, and the commission that is thereby advanced to the merchant to whom the same is consigned for sale. To raise money by tax on the inhabitants is utterly impracticable here, for there are several hundred families, nay the greatest part of the whole province, have not five shillings by them, nor any means to raise it, because there is very little amongst us, and that a bar coin that is not current with our neighbors, nor have any liberty yet from Her Majesty to advance coin so as to introduce it amongst us, by means of which the best in the province are sometimes put to a straight to procure money for their traveling expenses."³⁸ There was besides a danger that these two provinces might be attacked by the Indians. By this appeal to the Crown through the revenue, Virginia and Maryland were excused in the main, from active participation in the French and Indian wars.

³⁵ Bacon’s Laws, Index.

³⁶ Bacon’s Laws.

LOSS OF FOREIGN MARKET.

Perhaps what brought on adverse conditions in Maryland and Virginia more than anything else, was the loss of the European markets through the wars which were taking place in Europe through the latter seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. Colonel Quarry writing to the Lords of Trade and Plantation in 1704 tells of the woeful conditions in the two tobacco colonies for this reason. "The present war hath cut us out of the trade of Spain, France, Flanders and part of the Baltic, which took off at least 20,000 hogsheads every year and that of the most ordinaryest sort, whereas now the greatest foreign market is Holland, which is but little in comparison of the browner sort; and it is too evident that we have cloyed that market.”³⁹ In Russia it was found that tobacco could be grown more cheaply than it could be exported from England. Some merchants in 1705 had contracted with the Czar of Muscovy for importing tobacco into his dominions, and had prepared thousands of hogsheads in Maryland and Virginia for that purpose; but when they found that a larger margin of gain could be made by manufacture of Russian-grown tobacco, they sent “engines and materials thither for manufacturing tobacco of the growth of Russia and its dependencies, which tends to the utter ruin of his Majesty’s subjects, to the great prejudice of Virginia and Maryland.”⁴⁰ In 1706 Colonel Quarry, speaking of the market says “Never was so great a quantity of tobacco come from the Plantations in one year, as is expected in England this summer, nor was there ever so dismal a prospect of a market. The Dutch and their neighbors in Germany are said to have planted the last year 33,500 hogsheads. If true, this threatens to ruin Maryland and Virginia.”

³⁷ Calendar State Papers, 1701.

Here we have the Baltic countries, particularly Russia, cut off from the English trade by the wars of Charles XII, and soon growing tobacco more cheaply than they could import it; Holland turning to the growth of tobacco so that she can not only supply herself, but can take advantage of the trade of southern Europe which England lost when she declared war on France and Spain. Add to this a larger production of tobacco than ever, and we can see the warehouses of English merchants loaded with tobacco.

LACK OF SHIPS.

But there is till another difficulty facing the planters more squarely than ever in these first ten or fifteen years of the eighteenth century. By the Navigation Acts, all trade of the colonists had to be carried in English vessels. This condition was onerous enough in times of peace, but when English ships were required in some other part of the world, as they were now

during the War of the Spanish Succession, the planters were left helpless so far as getting their tobacco to England was concerned. In 1707 John Linton reports that by January 3, 1708, three crops will be ready to be shipped from Maryland and Virginia.⁴¹ Not only was there this lack of ships, but there was no system to the coming of vessels, most of them coming singly, or at best in small groups. Colonel Quarry first brought this to the attention of the Lords of Trade in 1704.⁴² He says, "No trade belonging to England is worse managed than the tobacco trade. I am sure that a regulation would be to the interest of Her Majesty, the Planter and the Merchant. These Provinces produce but one crop of tobacco in a year; one fleet of ships may carry home all this tobacco under a good convoy; this would fix the price of tobacco here, in England, and in all foreign markets; then all persons concerned would buy briskly, being well assured that no other supply would come till next year's fleet; whereas the late destructive and irregular way of having several fleets to carry home this tobacco ruins trade, discourages the buyer, lowers the price, to the ruin of all concerned; for when an after fleet is expected, they always depend on ten times a greater quantity than there really is, and so defer buying. Perhaps there never was such an instance of four several fleets that went from hence in fourteen months time, which hath given such a fatal blow to trade that will hardly be retrieved, by which means several thousands of hogsheads of Oronoco tobacco were not worth to the owners one penny, some left on the masters of the ships hands for the freight . . . it had the fatal effect, that the tobacco yielding little or nothing, the planters' Bills of Exchange were returned protested to their great damage . . . " He then speaks of two fleets coming to the colonies to trade—the smaller one known as the Smokers Fleet and the larger as the Grand Fleet. "The Smokers Fleet, thinking to take advantage of the Planters, would not sell their goods (manufactures) but at a very extravagant price, which they would not give, depending on the ⁴¹ Calendar of State Papers, 1706.

⁴² Calendar of State Papers, 1704.

Grand Fleet's coming in the Fall; and perhaps they concluding that the Smoker's Fleet had pretty well supplied the country, slackened their hand and sent not so much goods as otherwise they would have done; so that between them both, the country is disappointed and in great want of goods."

This proposal at once started discussion among the Merchants in England. Those from Liverpool and Bristol objected to the use of only one fleet, claiming that if all the ships arrived at once, a glut would follow, and that in America the planters would hold their tobacco for a high price. They were agreed with by the London merchants who traded for themselves; these, according to the report by the Council of Trade and Plantations to the Queen, "would always have the market open, and therefore desire two convoys yearly; those who trade as factors are satisfied with one." So that the division among merchants on this question was rather between the kind of merchants—i. e. independent merchants and factors rather than between the outport merchants of Liverpool and Bristol and those of London,⁴³ as represented by Dr. Morris in her work "Maryland Trade, 1689-1715." At any rate those favoring one convoy were successful in convincing the Council, upon whose recommendation the Queen in February of 1707, issued an order-in-council directing a convoy to be prepared for Maryland and Virginia, and succeeding convoys to be sent annually.⁴⁴ The fleet was to arrive in America in October and leave in May, giving the planters plenty of time to prepare their tobacco and the merchants time to sell their goods, and be ready to leave before "sickness seized the men and their ships rotted from the worm."⁴⁵ This plan received the support of both colonies, but no records show whether or not the practice continued.

RESULTS OF THESE CONDITIONS.

Having surveyed some of the main causes of the unfortunate conditions in Maryland, let us see what the results were. In the first place not only extreme poverty prevailed, but indebtedness was the lot of many of the poorer planters. And where indebtedness and poverty prevail with no definite ground for hope of betterment, there is bound to be developed a feeling of disloyalty either taking the form of violence as in the case of Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia during the previous century, or of energetic protest against the prevailing conditions. While Maryland had not a rebellion of the same proportions as the above-named, there is at least one such given by Scharf, that must have been caused by the same conditions. "The exception to the general quietude of this period happened in 1705, when the repose of Maryland was somewhat disturbed by a conspiracy of discontented debtors and others who attempted with the aid of Negroes and Indians to seize the government in order to discharge their incumbrances by assuming the administration. The provincial court house was burnt, together with a number of other buildings. A timely discovery frustrated the plans of the conspirators, and Richard Clark, the principal ringleader, and a number of others were arrested, others outlawed and attainted by the Assembly. In 1707, this same Clark was charged with the design of burning Annapolis, destroying the public records, and of then turning pirate. He was sentenced to death, but no records tell whether the sentence was ever executed."⁴⁶ In order partially to relieve conditions, the Maryland assembly passed an act in 1706 making hemp or flax staple products, to be used for paying one-fourth of any debt, hemp at six pence and flax at nine pence per pound.⁴⁷ Governor Seymour reports that they have turned to the growth of these commodities, and also to the manufacture of naval stores, which are now permitted by Her Majesty. The fields which have become too poor for tobacco are now used for growing hemp. He says that though the colonists are willing to attempt the production of rosin, pitch, tar and turpentine, their lack of skill in preparing it will prove a great hindrance to the trade.⁴⁸ Again in 1708, he says that "for several years the entire product of their tobacco would hardly cloathe the servants that made it. This," he says, "has produced two effects: (1) Some, in hopes of better success, have continued planting till they have run themselves so far in debt that they have been forced to sell part of their land and servants to secure the rest; (2) Others, out of mere necessity, have fallen into the manufacturing of woolen, cotton, flax, leather, etc., which they have brought to such perfection that four whole counties, and part of several others, not only clothed themselves, but sold great quantities of the same material to other neighboring countries."⁴⁹ But there were many who felt that they could do better in some colony other than a tobacco colony and went either to Pennsylvania or Carolina, "the chief motives whereto are the poverty of this country, the planters having suffered extremely the present war in the markets being shut-up, so that after the numerous hazards of unreasonable weather, lack of ships, lack of plants, the fly, the ground worm, the horne worm, its being house burnt, frost-bitten, the dangers of sea and our enemies all encountered and overcome, the freighters have not had near the value of their labor or expense of servants and clothing, etc." According to a report by the Maryland Council in 1710, "planters daily desert their abodes for fear of being imprisoned, and repair to the Southern Colonies, North and South Carolina or elsewhere, to seek new settlements."⁵⁰ . . . All this oppression is further increased by the insatiable avarice of many creditors, who are very ready in renewing their debtors' protested bills, refusing to take any other satisfaction than money sterling, which cannot be had here, and threatening them with immediate imprisonment in case they renew them not, with their best friends endorsers thereon, so that many others besides the principal debtors are become desperately involved.”⁵¹ In this year (1710) the House of Delegates passed a law “for relieving the inhabitants from some aggrievances they lie under.”⁵² This shows that at least the legislature was sympathetic, yet because the aggrievances were so deep and far-reaching, they were not able to improve the lot of the planter a great deal.

ILLICIT TRADE.

There was one form of trade that must be mentioned here which did prove lucrative to the planters who conducted it; that was the illegal or illicit trade. This grew up after the passage of the Navigation Acts, and was carried on not only in Maryland and Virginia, but by all the English colonies. According to these laws, “all vessels trading in the colonies must be either of English or colonial build, must import foreign articles only through England,” and above all, “must carry tobacco, an enumerated article, directly home or to another English Colony.” To enforce all these regulations all vessels had to be registered in England, their registry examined in the colonies, and heavy bond had to be given there for the proper delivery of the tobacco. These were the laws which the English governors in Maryland, and especially the zealous English Customs officials, complained were frequently broken. Edward Randolph told the Commissioners of the Customs, for instance, that it was the fraudulent practice of collectors to allow tobacco to be loaded on forged certificates, for offering which there was no penalty in the colony; to accept short entries for the payment of the penny a pound provided masters purchased the collectors’ own crops for export, and to permit goods to be imported directly from foreign countries. He said, too, that bonds were given by men of insufficient estates in the colonies; that often they were falsely discharged, as it was hard to get a colonial jury to prosecute a forfeited bond; and that tobacco was often shipped aboard New England or other plantation vessels, without paying duty or giving any bond at all.

⁵¹ Calendar State Papers, 1710.

Between 1691-1702 there were thirty-one vessels definitely recorded as conducting illicit trade. Nearly all were seized, and eleven can be absolutely identified as Scottish or as concerned in direct trade with Scotland.”⁵³ By an Act of the Privy Council, Governor Nicholson was instructed in 1694 to hire one or more small vessels of about 40 tons each to cruise upon the coasts of Maryland and Pennsylvania with power to examine all ships, inspect their clearings, and prosecute all offenders.⁵⁴ In 1700, Governor Blakiston reports the arrival of this vessel, the “Messenger.” He states, however, that “little illegal trading has come to (his) my notice save one Theophilus Turner, whom (he has) I have sent to England.”⁵⁵ In March, 1700, Robert Quarry, writing to the Commissioners of Customs, tells of illicit trade in tobacco which has been going on for four or five years between Barbados (where it was received) and Philadelphia, Virginia, Maryland, and New York. He says “When the tobacco is landed there, they replace it into boxes, casks, etc., and send it for England and Ireland. The conveniency of its package makes it very easy to run, especially since the officers do not expect tobacco on board Barbados ships, and the saving of the duty makes it a far better trade than any commodity they can carry from Barbados.”⁵⁶ He then tells of trade between Pennsylvania and New York, which had been going on for over twelve years. The chief bootlegger was one Graverard, a Dutchman of New York. He would gather up his tobacco at night and cover it with wood or some other commodity. He stored the tobacco at a small Dutch village and waited for a vessel which was leaving for Surinaur, Curesaw, or Newfoundland, on which the tobacco was landed. He and one of his fellow-pirates were seized by Governor Blakiston of Maryland. The law broken most, perhaps, was the one requiring a penny a pound duty on tobacco shipped to the plantations. The way in which it was broken, if not entirely ignored, was by the cramming into a hogshead of six, eight or ten hundredweight and passing it for a hogshead of four hundredweight. The collectors then vie with one another as to who shall receive most of the money from such duties; the merchant then plays the one against the other, giving his trade to the lowest bidder. Another place to which tobacco was consigned was to the Isle of Man, by whose constitution it ranks as a foreign country. In this way all debenture goods sent to that place was entitled to a drawback, or refund of certain duties. The tobacco later was run off to Ireland and Great Britain. However, if we are to believe the reports of the Governors of Maryland, illegal trade during this period was comparatively small, and the offenders very often apprehended.

This marks the end of the narrative, the purpose of which, as I stated in an early page, was to show the causes and results of the features of the tobacco trade at this time, which made the period one of the two darkest ones in the colonial history of Maryland. The other was the period which followed the Restoration in England. The essay lays no claim to being an exhaustive or detailed account, but aims in a way to show wherein Maryland trade differed, if it did, from that of Virginia, and how that of the two tobacco provinces was intimately tied up.

EXTRACTS FROM ACCOUNT AND LETTER BOOKS OF
DR. CHARLES CARROLL, OF ANNAPOLIS.

Annapolis 24th Febr'y 1753

Sir

When I wrote you my last Lre I was in Hopes that all opposition to my Surveys were at an End but I now find a new one which I did not know of M^r Crabb & Needham who Claim a Special warrant dated 10th June last to resurvey a Tract of Land on the proclamation taken up by one Verdress near the mountain.

In order therefore to secure myself ag^t that after the great Trouble & Expen^ce I have been at I must alter the Bebeginning of the Resurvey called New London w^{ch} I last sent you & take in that Called London by the warr^t of Samuel Reads which Courses I have sent you by my son who I hope will meet you at M^r Bells.

The Survey of London which begins at the Tree of Green Spring being a Resurvey of wine Garden in my Name w^{ch} M^r Howard gave you I must request you will stop & add the same Land to New London as now directed & return the same as soon as possible that I may comply with the needfull.

I hope this will not give you much Trouble and that you will oblige me in the speedy Execution thereof.

I need not further Explain myself as my son will do it if needfull if he meets you or he will leave the Courses which I have made as plain as possible. It is to begin in the Line of Mess^{rs} Addison & Murdocks Land and so runs as to include the Survey called London in that Called New London Surveyed by Sam^l Read Special warr^t to resurvey Baily Purchase. I had a 1000^{as} of Common Warrt. in October 1750 or 1751 of which I find no Return pray let me know where that warrt. was Located or Applied & how much of my Warr^t of 1500^{as} dated

15th June last is Yet unexecuted as also 400^{as} dated the 5th June and where located

I had 300^{as} 16th Ap^l 1751 & June 11th that Year 700^a w^{ch} I shall be very much obliged if you will let me know how located or applyed; If any of these Warr^{ts} which bare date before the 10th June last were located on the Drafts of Hunting Creek & not executed you may return the Cert: of New London by such Warr^t as well as Reads which I Can at any Time assign if Needfull. Pray excuse my Importuning you as my Interest is at Stake I am obliged to do it

If my son does not meet you at Home and any Difficulty occurs to you in this affair I will pay for a Messeng^r if you send one on the occation.

I hope to hear from you soon and am Very respectfully

I have lately taken up about 11000^{as} of Land Back near Monocosey on which I find Iron Ore & good Conveniencys for erecting Iron works which was my Inducement, this Land I am to pay for to the L^d Pro^{rys} about the latter End of this month £550 Ster. or otherwise loose it, of which I have not that I can readily command more than £250 Ster. tho considerable Debts due to me on Mort. & other wise.

I am therefore to request the Favour of you that you will lend me your Bills of Exch. for £300 Ster. which I will repay you with Int. in Twelve Months, and either assign you very good Mortg. of more than the sume or give you my own Bond for the same or other Security to Your Liking.

This will be a Singular Service to me as my Family and what I may the more freely Request from Your near Relation to my Children & long Acquaintance with myself.

Your money will be as secure as if in the Bank of England & better interest.

I had a Loss in John's this Year of Two Hundred Pounds uninsured and not hearing what ships are arrived in Britain from hence is one Reason that I stand in need of your Assistance on this present occasion.

In Case you do not at this Season Incline to draw Bills Your Lre of Credit to the Agent or note for the same payable in Bills of Exch to me or order at or before the 20th Sep^r next will Equally answer which latter I can endorse to the Agent.

Your Favour herein will much oblige me If you will let me know in a Line what security will be Agreeable shall be complied with & sent you.

I Reced Your Favour of the 3^d Inst & am obliged for Your Kind Intention I suppose the Agent would take Moydores at 27 Shill Ster. & Pistoles of paper weight at Sixteen Shill. & Six pence Ster. & Spanish Dollars or pieces of Eight at four Shill & Six pence Ster. These I think are the Rates at which those species are curr^t.

Mr Cuthbert Sandys has been with me here & Agreed for one Hundred Ton Baltimore Pig Iron to be del^d in Rappahannock River in Virginia at five Pounds Ten Shill Ster p Ton.

I would choose rather to deliver that Iron in Patapsco River on Board a Vessel at five Pounds Ster. p. Ton than send it round at that Rate above.

He has likewise engaged that Whatever Vessel I send shall not be liable to seizure, Entering or clearing there, otherwise I could not afford to send it unless you also paid such Charges or engage to quit me of them, I have promised him to send Fifty Ton from hence by the latter End of June & the other Fifty as soon as the Vessel returns; If you approve of the above Terms please to Favour me with a Line by the Post or some other Conveyance directed to Doc^r Ch^s Carroll^u at Annapolis.

I am to Acknowledge the Fav^r of Y^{rs} dated the 29th Jan^{ry} last & to return you Thanks for Your Care & Endeavour to serve me in Relation to my Pig Iron in Johns Ship.

It is not improbable but as the weather grows warm there may be some means used to get up the Vessell which if done the Iron cannot be damaged.

I should Imagine if the Middle Deck was ripp^d up so that the Tobacco might Float it would so lighten the Vessell she may be recovered.

The Continuance of your Favour to me in that matter shall be duly acknowledged.

Gent

I rece^d Yours by way of London & find Pig Iron fallen which with the Top price of Bar Iron in London is a mistery The plantations will afford less pig Iron to be imported to Britain Rather than more, for I assure you ore near the Water side begins to thin & be Exhausted And it is a Commodity will not admit of long Land Carriage. I understand that good Rey or Rey Grass seed as also Clover seed may be had cheap from your port. I desire therefore if the first does not exceed Two Shill & Six pence p Bushell or thereabouts you will send me six Bushells & have it put up in Tight Casks to preserve it from wett and that you will also send me of the second Viz: red Clover Twenty Pounds pray let it be in a Tight Bag put into the Cask with the Rey Grass seed & endeavour to get them new & fresh or they may fail in Growth here, please also to

* Your Skipper may Come to in the Mouth of Severn River here and Call on me for orders to the Clark to deliver the pigg Iron or he may go directly to patapsco to the Furnace (which I think would be best) and the Clark shall have Directions to deliver the Iron on Board there. I shall be glad to supply you at any Time we have pig Iron at the Rate of five pounds Ster p Ton.

send me four ounces of Good Cabbage seed & four Ounces of Carrott seed in distinct papers put into the same Cask the Last of which please to Charge to my Acc^t I desire you will also send me four Ream of such paper as is generally used in the Lawyer's Offices for Copying Deeds & called Copying Paper & as far as I Can Understand is about five Shill. p. Ream & Two Reams of good Cut paper of about Nine Shills per Ream and as Iron Ware is reasonable I desire you will send me a small Chamber Grate for Coal of about Twelve Shill value.

Dear Charles

I reced Yours of Jan^{ry} 25 by way Patuxent with the Inclosed Pamphlett as also Copy by Rawlings I would not have you interfere in the Countrys Disputes untill you may be assured of a Gratefull Acknowledgement from them to those who have endeavoured to Serve them already. As you are going to enter into the world you had best do it with as few Enemies as You can possibly avoid making and the more so as you may be assured some have made themselves so ready to your Hand you will find more Usefull Subjects for your future Life to employ Your Thoughts and conversation.

Your desire to know how Mr Carroll has proceeded he has filed a Bill in Court here Ag^t me & if such a Chancellor as we have had should deterrmine his Claim no Doubt it would be not in my favour as he was my declared Enemy. I shall battle it with him as long as I can untill I have reason to hope for equal Justice his money & Influence are Two Things that are two powerfull for me, but yet I must Endeavour the best I can in my Own Defence the whole Popish Interest have Levelled their Artillery Ag^t me and are strongly Associated with the Government. A Governor is daily Expected,* I hope he will prove a more unprejudiced one than our former It stands you upon to make Yourself Capable of rubbing thro what you may Expect here, to wit all the injury a Popish Faction Can do you, I observe the Copy of the Acc^t with Mr Black it is true, it is large but I need not tell you that I Expect that it has been laid out in such necessary uses as could not be avoided. I wrote you by Wilson in the Grove the 15th May & Copy by Rawlings both Inclosed to Mr Black to which refer you I only now write a Line to let you know we are all well Except Jackey who has a troublesome Cough but hope will do well, we have little here worth Communicating our new Governour not yet arrived, but it seems daily Expected, tho' I think the people would live quiet enough without One & very well contented Especially their heavy Taxes would thereby be lessened The French in Conjunction with their friend Indians are endeavour^g to prevent our Settling the North East Branches of the Messicipi next to Virginia & the other British Governments and have lately Cut of Severall there, and the Settlement of those parts by British Subjects is well worthy the Attention of the Nation both to secure a Barrier & prevent the Junction of the French from the River Canada to Missicipi Intirely Surrounding on the Back the English Collonys, and I conceive the ready way to Establish a Settlement back there would be to appoint a Select Government & Colony there immediately Under the Crown with a Summary Procedure of Justice for Ease of the Settlers & to let the first Adventurers have Land in reasonable Quantities free & clear of Quit Rents for many Years. Large Grants of Lands to private Persons will never be a means of answering the desired End Cast Your Eye on the best Drafts of this Continent and you will see there Branches of Mesissisipi Running from the Lakes of Canada about South West to the Westward of the Appalachin Mountains this I give you as a Hint which may serve in proper Conversation, I refer further to my next mean Time. If Mr Dulany reconsiders the State of our Case in Relation to Yeate's forbearance & Larkins Resurvey he may possibly change his Sentiments, I Grant that taking a patent on a Resurvey does not destroy the whole of the original Right of the Land resurveyed but that it will Subsist Against a Younger Survey interfering with it, I conceive every man has a right to dispose of his own Estate and I will Suppose that John Larkin had a good right to Lloyds Lott & to Larkins Addition took a warr^t to resurvey them which intitled him to add Vacancy or exclude any of the Lands to be resurveyed he thereupon left out part of Larkins Addition and has his Quantity in the Resurvey Called United friendship and taken Patent thereon. Certainly he shall not now hold by the Patents of Larkins Addition & Lloyds Lott and United friendsp also Whereby he would have more Land than he really paid for, or was meant or intended to be Granted, I Cannot but be of opinion that What Land John Larkins Left out of Larkins his Addition upon his resurvey and is Included in Yeats forbearance is our property And as such on any part I would contend for it with any Man.

I do not know that it would Avail us any Thing to take a Warrant of Resurvey thereon now as I do not suppose There is any Vacancy to be Added and with regard to the part that is included in Larkins Addition Exclusive of the Lines of the resurvey it is so little that the Expence would be more than the Value.

COLONIAL RECORDS OF ST. MARY'S COUNTY.

CONTRIBUTED BY LOUIS DOW SCISCO.

St. Mary's County, the scene of the earliest provincial settlements, has lost all but a small fraction of its colonial county records. The county court house burned in 1831 and all losses are now attributed to that event. A court house which succeeded the burned one was torn down in 1899. The present court house at Leonardtown was erected in 1901.

The clerk's records in the public record room contain but one book antedating the fire of 1831, that one being a marriage register dating from 1795. By legislative act property owners were allowed, after the fire, to record anew any deeds whose original record had been destroyed. A liber contains 198 pages of such entries. Most of these are deeds executed after 1800, but a smaller portion comprises deeds of 1777 to 1800. It is said that there are one or two entries of colonial date. In a storage room adjacent to the record room is a collection of roughly classified disused records, all of which appear to be of date since 1831. It is stated that in the court house attic, reached by a ladder, is another collection of record material which has been so long unvisited that its character is now unknown.

The office of the register of wills has been rather more fortunate than the clerk's office in its preservation of records. For the period from 1777 to 1831 there is a considerable number of record volumes, of which no description will be here attempted. For the colonial period there are no records of bonds or inventories, but wills and accounts are as follows:

Liber P C No. 1 has 364 pages of wills dating from 1658 to 1732, the liber index carrying about 450 names.

Liber T A No. 1 has 747 pages of wills dating from 1732 to 1776.

Liber J J has 555 pages of wills dating from 1777 to 1791.

Liber H H No. 2 has 460 pages carrying administration accounts of 1674 to 1721, preceded by 28 pages of wills dating from 1775 to 1777, with one exception of 1771.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SOCIETY.

November 10th, 1930.—The regular meeting of the Society was held to-night with the President in the chair.

He stated that the best known of his buildings are Gunston Hall, the home of George Mason in Fairfax County, Virginia; Mathias Hammond's home, the "Harwood House"; and it is claimed by tradition that he designed and built the "Old Senate Chamber" in the State House at Annapolis. ANNUAL MEETING.

February 9th, 1931.—The regular monthly meeting was adjourned at 9 p. m. and the Annual meeting was called to order.

The President read the report of the Council, and then announced that the election of officers was in order; whereupon, on motion duly seconded and unanimously carried, the Secretary was requested to cast a ballot for all of the officers and members of committees. It was so done and the annual meeting then adjourned.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

By requirement of the Constitution and By-Laws, the Council reports, at the Annual Meeting "the work accomplished during the preceding year, with statement of membership."

By established custom it but epitomizes the Reports of The Trustees of the Athenaeum and of the several Standing Committees, which have for many years been published in full in the Society's quarterly magazine and to which reference is made for detailed information.

The Treasurer reports the current receipts and expenditures upon the General Account and upon certain Special Accounts, including the State Appropriations for the repair and publication, for its account, of the State Archives. Together with the Trustees of the Athenaeum and the Committee on Finance, he also reports that the groundrent of six thousand dollars per annum issuing from the old Athenaeum property, has been redeemed in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, the major portion of which amount has been reinvested, though unavoidably producing a reduced income. The usual examination of the accounts of the Treasurer and verification of securities has been made.

The Trustees of the Athenaeum have maintained the physical property of the Society in good repair and have not been required to make any considerable structural changes, though some improvements in heating and ventilation have been effected and others are in contemplation.

The Committee on the Library reports large accessions of books, manuscripts and maps by gift and purchase, notable among the latter are the manuscript rent roll of Saint Mary's and Charles Counties, and the marriage settlement of Lady Diana Egerton prior to her marriage to Frederick, sixth Lord Baltimore. The Peabody Institute has deposited twelve lots of original manuscripts, comprising State papers of great value. Work has steadily and satisfactorily progressed in the Cataloguing Division and in the Repair and Rebuilding shop, through which nearly fifteen hundred pieces have passed during the year. The increased use of the opportunities afforded by the Society to students from other States is gratifying, as is also the commendation they bestow upon its representatives.

The Committee on Publications has issued four numbers of the Society's Magazine, under the careful editorship of Mr. Dielman, containing valuable matter relating chiefly to Maryland history in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

It has in press, as further publications of the Archives of Maryland published by the Society on behalf of the State and under the editorship of Dr. J. Hall Pleasants, Volume XLVII, being the seventh relating to the period of the Revolution and comprising letters addressed to the Governor and Council during the year 1781;—and Volume XLVIII, being the Journal and Correspondence of the State Council and constituting the eighth volume relating to the period of the Revolution.

The Committee on the Gallery has continued its work in the glazing and preservation of paintings, and the collection has been enriched by two portraits, one by Badger, presented with miniatures, commissions etc., by Miss Eaton and Mrs. Weld; and by a case containing interesting historic articles collected by the late Dr. James Mackall Taylor of Charles County and donated by Mrs. Katherine Mackenzie Brevitt.

The Committee on Membership, for the first time in many years, reports a net loss of seven, the number now standing, for all classes, at 1277.

The Committee on Addresses has again secured the presentation of a series of admirable papers, one for each meeting of the Society, covering a wide range of subjects including art, architecture, history, biography, etc. Some of the papers were attractively illustrated and all furnish a valuable addition to our collections.

The labors of the Committee on Genealogy and Heraldry have been continuous and their results of much value.

It has again been the pleasure of the Society to have as its guests the Maryland Society of the Cincinnati and the Eastern Shore Society.

While the reduction in the Society's revenue has caused some curtailment of budget allowances, neither the scope nor the value of its labors will be reduced and, with the continued loyalty of its working force, it anticipates a prosperous and useful year.

Respectfully submitted,

W. HALL HARRIS, President,
for the Council.

REPORT OF THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE.

Your Committee is pleased to report substantial additions to the Society's collections, from members and friends; and while these gifts have not been as numerous as those for the preceding year, they are of great interest and value. We have received by gift: 294 bound volumes, 167 pamphlets, 91 pieces of manuscript, 72 newspapers, 149 pieces of sheet music, 17 photostat copies, 10 lithographic prints.

We have acquired by purchase 27 volumes at a cost of $838.19; but of this amount, $632.50 was paid for the manuscript Rent Roll of St. Mary's and Charles counties (Calvert Papers) secured at auction in London. Other important items of this group are:

Letter book of Mark Pringle, an early Baltimore merchant.
Minutes of the Paint and Powder Club, 1894-96.

Minutes of Emory Grove Camp Meeting Association, 1878.
Eleven account books of Ford's Theatre.
Varle's map of Washington and Frederick counties, 1808.

The marriage settlement of Lady Diana Egerton prior to her marriage with Frederick, sixth Lord Baltimore. This latter was also secured at auction in London.

The photostat machine was in operation on a part-time basis, but although hampered materially by the small amount of money available, we were able to turn out a very respectable amount of work. Some of the frailest manuscripts have been thus reproduced and the originals retired from use until such time as it may be possible to have them substantially restored.

Cataloguing has been carried forward through the capable and intelligent work of Misses Carolina V. and Elizabeth Davison. Much material, heretofore merely stored, is now available for the use of members and visitors. No other feature of our activities is of greater value to the Society and to the public generally, than that of the cataloguing department.

The repair, mounting and binding of the State's Archives and other manuscripts belonging to the Society, has gone steadily forward in the hands of our four skilled workers. A total of 1,474 pieces of manuscripts and printed matter has been repaired and volumes have been bound and placed on the shelves.

A number of students from other cities have made use of the facilities and collections of the Society in prosecuting research work and they are warm in their praise of the courteous and efficient service rendered by the employees of the Society.

Respectfully submitted,

LOUIS H. DIELMAN,
Chairman, Library Committee.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADDRESSES AND LITERARY ENTERTAINMENTS.

March 10, 1930—Conclusion of the address by Mr. Hancock.

May 21, 1930—At a Special Meeting of the Society at which the Members of the Eastern Shore Society of Baltimore City were guests, Mr. R. T. Haines gave an illustrated address entitled, "Annapolis, Its Architecture, Traditions and Its Association with George Washington."

October 13, 1930—"Some Aspects of Slavery in Maryland," by Mr. William L. Marbury.

November 10, 1930—"The Old Senate Chamber, Annapolis, Maryland," by Mr. DeCourcy W. Thom.

December 8, 1930—"Steamboat'n' Days," by Mr. John H. K. Shannahan.

January 12, 1931—"Ancient and Modern Communication in Maryland," by Mr. Oliver Martin, of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company. (This address was illustrated by moving pictures and lantern slides.)

The attendance at the different meetings has been very gratifying and displays a keen interest by the membership in the above-mentioned subjects which have been brought before it through the kindness and courtesy of the above-named gentlemen.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN L. SANFORD,
Chairman.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE ATHENAEUM.

The budget allowance at the beginning of the year was $4,500.00. There was a deficit from 1929 of $382.79. We have expended during the year for maintenance of buildings, salaries, fuel, insurance, taxes, etc., a total of $3,745.75, which with the deficit makes a grand total of $4,128.54, leaving a balance of $371.46.

The following work was done under maintenance and repairs: The papering of the Wyatt Room was completed. The roof of the Monument Street entrance was replaced. The entire roof and gutters of the Monument Street Building were repaired and repainted. Wire doors in basement were repaired. Adjustments were made in the heating plant.

GEORGE CALVERT AT OXFORD.

By BROMLEY SMITH.

The Lords Baltimore, first to last, were educated men. They may not have been scholars, in the sense that they could produce erudite works; but they were able to set down their thoughts in an orderly way, according to the teachings of the schools, and they could even flavor their printed efforts with traces of university instruction. George Calvert, for instance, the first of the line, while a senior at Trinity College, Oxford, penned Latin elegiac verses of sufficient merit to have them accepted for publication in a memorial volume issued by the University.

Collegiate interest was due partly to Unton's position as Elizabeth's Ambassador to the court of Henry IV of France, partly to his bravery on horseback and on foot at the Battle of Zutphen, in which Sir Philip Sidney received his fatal wound, but largely to a certain dramatic incident, which was as sensational as Raleigh's chivalrous deed, when he cast his cloak in the mud to protect the dainty feet of the Queen. Unton became Elizabeth's champion as soon as he heard that the Duke of Guise had referred to Her Majesty "impudently, lightly, and overboldly." He challenged that gentleman to meet him with whatever arms he should choose, on horseback or on foot. The challenge continued: "Nor would I have you think any inequality of person between us, I being issued of as great a race and noble house every way as yourself. . . . If you consent not to meet me, I will hold you, and cause you to be generally held, for the arrantest coward and most slanderous slave that lives in all France."

Unton's challenge, thrice sent, was not accepted; hence the painful necessity of posting the Duke. When the champion's lance dropped from his failing hand in 1596, the University authorized a memorial volume to which it invited contributions from faculty, friends, and students. Young Calvert was one of the contributors, his poem being entitled "Carmen funebre in D. Hen. Untonum." Without minimizing the literary merits of the verses, we should not regard them as a spontaneous outburst of grief over a great personal loss, but rather as a school exercise, inspired by the chivalrous career of an Oxford man.

School exercises in Latin verse, in imitation of classic models, were required of all students in the Arts course. Few of these escaped the waste-basket and were published; such as, for instance, the Silva of John Milton of Cambridge, the Carmen funebre of George Calvert of Oxford, and the Messiah of Samuel Johnson. It is generally admitted that considerable literary ability is necessary for an Englishman to turn his thought into Latin, and especially into Latin verse. Calvert must have possessed considerable ability even in his college days, else he would never have been asked by King James to assist in the composition of the attack on Vorstius, the Dutch theologian, to say nothing of the correspondence with foreign powers incident to the office of Secretary of State.

Where he obtained the rudiments of Latin is unknown, but he was probably instructed by some Yorkshire domine, or by some college student who had been permitted to lop off a few terms between his degrees. George's progress must have been satisfactory, for at the age of fourteen he set out for Oxford on horseback, going in a fair-sized party for company and safety. Each student had a sum of money for travelling expenses and for the fees at the University. Arrived at Oxford, George applied for admission into Trinity College.

His credentials must have met with approval, else the Head of the college would not have entered his name in the Buttery-book, thereby permitting him to be served with bread, beer, meat, and other articles of diet. After a room had been assigned to him, a tutor was engaged, who thenceforth guided his studies and acquainted him with the doctrines of the established church.

Traces of this tutoring system are evident at The Johns Hopkins University and other American institutions, in the appointment of advisors for undergraduates. As these advisors are not paid by the colleges nor by the students for their services, their work of supervision is apt to be perfunctory. In the English system the tutor makes his living by training pupils and preparing them for the tests. Fortunate was the lad who fell into the hands of an able, conscientious tutor. The name of George's tutor is not known, but he must have been an expert, judging by the speed with which he put his pupil through the course—two years and eight months instead of four years.

After Calvert had been at Trinity about two weeks, a Beadle, who had found his name on the Buttery-book, instructed him to appear before Vice-Chancellor Yeldard on a Friday. When that day came, the Beadle formed a little procession, which he led down to the Vice's court or lodgings, where the exercises of matriculation were performed. The boys were introduced by the Head of their college, or his deputy, listened to a little speech of welcome, and then took an oath to support the Thirty-nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer. If Calvert had been at this time a Romanist, he would have stayed away from the matriculation ceremony to avoid signing the Subscription-book, which contained the Articles. On account of his age, being under sixteen, he was not required to acknowledge the Supremacy of Elizabeth, that oath being reserved until he was more mature and being made a condition of graduation.

The next step in matriculation involved allegiance to the University itself. In the presence of his mates, the Beadles, and other functionaries, Calvert took the following oath:

Vice-Chancellor: "With your hands on the Sacro-sanct Evangels of Christ, you do swear to observe all the Statutes, Privileges, and Customs of this University of Oxford; so help you God."

George: "I do."

Having agreed to be loyal to the Church and the University, he was led to the Matriculation Register, in which he, or a Beadle, penned the words that made Oxford his Alma Mater: "12 July 1594, Trin., Calverte, George; Yorks., pleb. f. 14." In this brief form was given the date of matriculation, the college, the name, the shire of residence, the station of the father, and the age of the student. Of these items 'Yorkshire' was important, not from the standpoint of residence, for that should have included his village, Kipling, but because it designated a county from which or for which a scholarship might be allotted. There is no record of George's receiving any scholarship. 'Pleb. f.,' the abbreviation of plebeii filius, son of a plebian or commoner, determined the fees of the University, which varied according to the rank of the parent. The age, in this case, indicated that he need not take the Oath of Supremacy.

Although George was young in years, he was worldly wise; for when he seized the pen he pulled one over on the Vice and the Registrar, by signing as a 'pleb. fil.,' or in college parlance, as a commoner. The fee for matriculation in this rank was only four pence. A few years later, when George was ready for his degree, he supplicated as a 'gen. fil.,' that is, a 'generosi filius,' or son of a gentleman, the matriculation fee for which rank would have been one shilling. The reader is permitted to infer that George's family had come up a peg, or that he had fattened his purse by eight pence.

Having begun his college career propitiously, the fourteen year old boy purchased a cap and gown suitable to an Oxford 'man,' of his class, and began to study under the guidance of his tutor.

Authority for those first days at Oxford is not discoverable in any documents written by George Calvert; but is inferred from details found in Jeremy Bentham's Memoirs. His father thus describes the initiation of Jeremy. "Entered my son a commoner at Queen's College; and he subscribed the Statutes of the University in the apartment of Dr. Browne, the Prevost of Queen's, he being the vice-chancellor; and by his recommendation I placed my son under the care of Mr. Jacob Jefferson, as his tutor, paying Mr. Jefferson for caution-money, £8; entrance to Butter, etc., 10 s.; matriculation, 17 s. 6 d.; table fees, 10 s. The age of my dear son, upon his being admitted of the University this day, is twelve years, three months, and thirteen days. . . . Dined in commons at Queen's College with Mr. Jefferson and the rest of the fellows and gownsmen of the house. Paid for commoners gown for my son, 12 s. 6 d. Paid for cap and tassel, 7 s."

Having been admitted, George was not allowed to settle down quietly with his tutor, for the upper classmen needed a little fun. This was obtained by subjecting the Freshmen to a form of hazing called 'tucking.' The verdant youth was ordered to hold out his chin, so that an upper classman might grate off the skin with a sharp thumbnail. The branded Freshman was then requested to drink a beer glass of salt water. Next, he took an oath, administered by the senior cook, upon an old shoe, which he was required to kiss reverently. Lastly, he was told to mount a chair which was placed upon a table, and from that high point to make a "pretty apothegm, jest or bull, or to speak eloquent nonsense, to make the company laugh."

When George had been thus initiated, his tutor introduced him to his books, even though it was July, for under the English system serious work is done during vacations, while term time is devoted to lectures, examinations, and sociability.

When the Michael term opened in October, George began to attend lectures on Latin grammar, delivered in Latin, designed to prevent him from "breaking Priscian's head," as making errors in Latin construction was called. It was absolutely necessary for him to master Latin, because the texts were written in that language, the lectures were given in it, the disputations for the degrees were in that tongue, and conversation in the schools was ordered to be in Latin, although commonly it was 'dog-Latin.' In short, every student, teacher, and officer of the University was supposed to forget English, while on the campus. Even "familiar letters," such as those of Milton, were frequently written in Latin. As a result of this discipline Calvert was able to compose a meritorious poem for the Funebria Nobilissimi ac Praestantissimi Equitis, D. Henrici Untoni, while in college; and afterward to perform secretarial duties for the home and foreign office, as well as to assist James in his religious controversies. Latin, in short, was the key to knowledge and preferment in college and in court.

The little poem already mentioned was buried with many others in a volume of memorial verse, laid on the shelf, and forgotten. As anything connected with the life of the Founder of Maryland has value to citizens of the Free State, a search was made among the libraries for a copy of the rare volume. Finally, it was discovered in The Henry Huntington Library and Art Gallery of San Marino, California. A photostat was taken and forwarded to Baltimore. From this the following reproduction was made:

P*ristina dum fuerat, monstrisq; notabilis atas,
Hæc olim cecinere poeta:
Corpora præ lachrymis, varias induta figuras,
Antiquam deperdere formam :)
Sic Phætoniades germani funera flentes,
Sic Niobe, & iam mæsta Cupressus.
Quod si vera canant, & pristina sæcla redirent,
Perpetuò memoraberis Unton;
Namq; tuos cineres dum quis gemibundus in urna
Imponet, condetq; sepulchro;
In silicem, aut marmor cedit, nec concides unquam

Georgius Calvert, Coll.
S. Trinit.

The free translation of the Alcmæan Strophies, employed by Calvert, here given, follows closely the order of words, while the annotations show that he was familiar with Servius' edition of Virgil, or that he had been browsing in the Metamorphoses of Ovid.

While there was an age, pristine and famed for its marvels,

These things at times the poets sang:

Persons, on account of tears, having put on varied forms,

Lost their former shape:

Thus the daughters of Phaeton, lamenting the loss of their brother,

Thus Niobe, and even the unhappy Cypressus.

But if they sang the truth, and the early days should return,

You, O Unton, will be remembered forever;

For indeed as soon as anyone, bemoaning, in the urn thine ashes

Shall place, and shall hide them in the tomb;

He shall be changed into stone or marble, nor shall ever perish

The enduring memorial to Unton.

Notes: The daring young Phaeton, unable to curb the fiery steeds that drew the golden chariot of the Sun, was playing havoc with the heavens and the earth, when Zeus, the Almighty Father, unsheathed his lightnings and hurled the youth to the ground. The sisters of Phaeton bewailed his loss for many months, until they themselves were turned into trees, that shed forever amber tears. Ovid, Metamorph., I, 750 ff.

The beautiful Niobe, mother of seven sons and seven daughters, was so proud of them that she scorned sacrifices to the goddess Latona, because she had borne only two children, Apollo and Diana. Latona called upon her children to chastise the insolent Niobe. They obeyed in a terrible way. Soon all of the children were slain by the silver arrows of the gods, while Niobe's husband, crazed with grief, made way with himself. So tremendous was the sorrow of Niobe, that she turned to stone, yet tears continued to trickle forever from the marble. Ovid, Met. VI, 145 ff.

By a Roman custom a bough of cypress was placed before the door of a house of mourning. In a grove, described by Ovid, was a cone-shaped cypress tree, which once had been the lovely youth, Cyparissus, beloved by Apollo. Inadvertently the boy killed a tame stag on which he was wont to ride. Seized with immoderate grief, he resolved on death and begged from Apollo the boon, that he might mourn forever. The god, himself full of sadness, changed the youth into a cypress, saying as he did so "your place shall always be where others grieve." Ovid, Met. X, 120 ff.

Calvert was obliged to apply his knowledge of Latin, while in college, to Logic and Philosophy, partly by lectures and partly by disputations. Through the first he was supposed to absorb information and principles; through the second, to demonstrate his ability to use them. The lecture system was extensively used because texts were scarce and costly, being owned only by the wealthier students. Oral disputations were the means of finding out the knowledge and ability of the pupils, written examinations not being given in those days. Accordingly three times every week George was required to be present at the exercises in his college, ready to dispute in Latin before his mates and teachers on logical and philosophical questions. Further, if he failed to be present in his college hall as an auditor, he was fined two shillings; and if he did not take his turn as Respondent or Prior Opponent, he was mulcted twelve shillings. It would appear that the course at Oxford for boys of Calvert's age was much more strenuous than that of the first two years of a modern high school.

In addition to these disputations in the hall of Trinity, there were also declamations. Calvert was required to write a speech in Latin, to memorize it, and then to deliver it before his mates. Members of the faculty were present to see that no scurrilous or derisive words were uttered, that nothing slurring or derogatory should be said concerning his associates, the faculty, or the institution. Sad experience had taught the Heads that some students in those days were inclined to personalities and unseemly language, even as they are nowadays. Lacking a college paper or comic magazine through which to criticize or lampoon their mates, the faculty, or the policies of the institution, Cal-vert's associates came out openly with their jokes and obscenities. And let it be said that a declamation in the Elizabethan days was exceedingly ribald before it drew the censure of the Principal of a hall. Some of the choice humor over which Calvert's companions guffawed is so offensive to our delicate ears that the surviving manuscripts are reserved for the private delectation of the erudite.

If the language of the students was sometimes rough, so also was their outward conduct, for they occasionally indulged in what is today called 'rough-house.' These college scraps were common between the Boreals, or Northerners, and the Australs, or Southerners, in England; just as they were between the nations at the University of Paris. Although the Aularian or Hall Rules directed that no students should interrupt by roaring or stamping, that they should not shove or push each other here and there, nor stir up fights, brawls, or tumults; boisterousness overcame good manners not only in the halls, but also in the streets of Oxford. Fierce indeed were the battles between town and gown. As Calvert afterward displayed an adventurous spirit, it is quite probable that he fought side by side with the Yorkshire boys in some of the scholastic collisions. These riotous scenes were, of course, infrequent, for college work was serious and on the whole arduous.

How arduous the course at Oxford was can be judged from the prescribed subjects. Twice a week for a year Calvert listened to lectures on Aristotelian Rhetoric, amplified by the precepts of Cicero, Quintilian, and Hermogenes. Twice a week he wrestled with Aristotelian Logic. Between times he attended lectures on Ethics, Politics, and Economics—all based on Aristotle. Then came Natural Philosophy, which was thoroughly saturated with Aristotle's views of the physical universe. Finally, a little Arithmetic, Geometry, Astronomy, and Music, topped off by Aristotelian Metaphysics, completed the instruction.

No one need be frightened at the Oxford curriculum of Calvert's day, for it is still the standard in many of our colleges. Grammar, and its handmaiden, Literature, is taught, because it shows the pupil how to use language; Logic, because it teaches correct thinking; Rhetoric, because the tone of speech and writing should be persuasive and colorful. Mathematics is supposed to develop the power to reason abstractly. Natural Philosophy, alias Physics, puts the student in close touch with nature in all her visible and even invisible forms. Ethics conveys some knowledge of human nature and society. Metaphysics conveys the speculations of learned doctors and saints on being. One who has pursued such courses should feel at ease among cultured men anywhere. George Calvert, under the guidance of his tutor, must have passed them in a creditable manner, for his after life was spent among the educated class.

Passing the subjects mentioned was no easy matter, for it involved oral disputations in public. The first of a series was taken by Calvert when he sought to become a 'sophister general.' This rank was attained by going through the following statutory procedure: the candidate was required to hand in three questions to the Master of his house a week before his test. When they had been approved, he hung them on the doors of the schools at eight o'clock of the morning of the day of disputation. His Opponents had been selected and notified. At the proper hour two stately beadles, bearing maces, strode before the disputants to the schools, charging each boy two shillings for the service.

The exercise in which young Calvert now participated was called 'doing generals.' As Respondent he defended his questions against the attacks of two Opponents from one o'clock until three, in the presence of a Regent Master, who acted as Moderator. On another day he himself acted as one of the Opponents against some Respondent. When these two disputations had been performed and his testamur had been duly signed, George was created a 'sophister general,' a kind of sub-degree attesting his proficiency in logic and grammar. The ceremony of creation was conducted by one of the Moderators of the disputations, who made a speech 'in praise of Aristotle and true logic,' gave each boy a copy of Aristotle's logic, and slipped over his head a plain black hood.

Having come through this preliminary test successfully, George prepared to take the next step toward a Bachelor's Degree. First, he obtained leave from Trinity College to 'supplicate,' or ask, the Congregation of the University for the degree. Permission being granted, he wrote out a paper to this effect: "I, George Calvert, student in the Faculty of Arts at Trinity College, do supplicate the Venerable Congregation of Masters Regents, since I have spent four years in the study of Logic, have responded to a Bachelor in Quadragesima, have been created a sophister general, and have completed all those exercises required by the statutes, that these be sufficient to admit me to lecture on some book of Aristotle's Logic."

George placed his 'supplicat' in the hands of a Regent-Master from Trinity, who took him to St. Mary's Church, clad in academical dress, but bareheaded. This was done, so that the members of the Congregation might look him over. They might refuse to grant his petition on account of unbecoming manners, such as insolence; weak morals; heterodoxy either in politics, philosophy, or religion; or intellectual deficiency. When George's turn came his Regent-Master stood in the middle of the floor and read out the 'Supplicat.' Then the Proctors went round the room and took the votes. A member whispered into the Proctor's ear, 'concedo,' if he were favorable, or 'nego,' if adverse. If there was no opposition the Proctor returned to the platform and announced that the prayer was granted. Four separate times George went through this ordeal. Then, there having been no objections, the Proctor pronounced the grace finally granted, and caused an entry to be made in the register of the Congregation.

Although young Calvert had been granted permission to go ahead, Oxford traditions required him to undergo certain ceremonies. One of these was called 'circuitus et visitatio.' This consisted in asking the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors to summon a Congregation, which might finally pass upon and grant the degree. On the afternoon before the Congregation met, a beadle led George, attired in academical dress, but bareheaded, and a Regent-Master from Trinity, round the schools (circuitus) and to the abodes of the Vice-Chancellor, Senior Proctor, and Junior Proctor (visitatio), before sunset. In this way everyone concerned was given an opportunity in broad daylight to look at the candidate and to object, if he saw fit.

The next ceremony was called the 'depositio,' because nine Bachelors of Arts had to appear in the outer room of the Congregation-house and 'depone' for the candidate. George, accordingly, was obliged to ask nine men to meet the Proctor, kneel before him, and take oath that they would declare their real sentiments as to his fitness in morals and knowledge. This information they conveyed to the Proctor by whispering in his ear: 'I know,' or 'I don't know,' or 'I believe.' In George's case a majority must have whispered 'I know,' for he was notified at his College that all was well. After that he was marched down to the Church and handed a pen with which to sign the XXXIX Articles, and next was required to take the oath of assent to the Royal Supremacy. All of these preliminaries out of the way, George was brought into the Congregation-house and presented to the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, by the Regent-Master of Trinity, who held his right hand.

The Vice-Chancellor then admitted the boy to his degree in a Latin formula, here translated: "Sir George Calvert, I admit you to lecture on any book whatsoever of Aristotle's Logic, and in addition of those arts which you are supposed to have heard under the statutes; and besides by my authority and by that of the whole University I give to you the power to enter the schools, to lecture, and to dispute, and to do all the other things which appertain to the degree of Bachelor of Arts."

An entry of this admission appears in the Register of Oxford, as follows: "Trinity. Calvert (Calvart) George; (gen. fil. n. m., a student of municipal law) adm. B. A. 23 Feb. 1597." According to this entry his family belonged to the gentry instead of the commonalty, as he had signed at matriculation. It also contained the information that George was the oldest son in the family, maximus natu, that he had been a law student who had been admitted to the degree of Bachelor of Arts on the 23rd of February, 1597.

Although young Calvert had been admitted to the degree and was by courtesy styled 'Bachelor of Arts,' privileged to prefix 'Dominus,' or in English, 'Sir,' to his name, he had not yet fulfilled all the requirements. When his 'grace' was granted, permitting him to aspire to the degree, there was a proviso; namely, that he determine in the next Quadragesima. Indeed, immediately after his admission he was taken to the Arts School and there asked by his presenter three questions, among which was this one: "What is a good?" To these questions he replied, "Aristotle will answer for me in the next Quadragesima."

This Quadragesimal or Lenten disputation was the last step in completing the Bachelor's degree and was technically called 'Determination.' Sir George Calvert had about two months in which to prepare for the coming ordeal. On Egg-Saturday, which is the Saturday before Ash-Wednesday, he donned his cap and gown, and presented himself at St. Mary's. Again nine Senior Bachelors 'deponed' that he was fit to determine. His name was then listed in a Register of the Determinants and his fee was paid to the Registrar. Joining with his fellow Determinants, George next helped to elect two of their own number to act as 'collectors.' These men divided the coming bachelors into groups of ten and assigned them to the schools where they were to dispute. Great was the strife over the election of these 'collectors,' for in their hands was the placing of the disputants in pleasant schools, as well as on 'gracious' days—that is, days when the students disputed only two hours instead of three. Those who were placed on the last day of the schedule were said to be 'dogged.' No one knows whether Calvert drew a favorable position, nor whether he attended the banquet given by the determining bachelors at the close of the Egg-Saturday proceedings.

Certain it is, however, that on Ash-Wednesday he was in the procession that marched to the schools, candidates from each college being shepherded by their Deans. The students went through a rehearsal, with typical questions propounded to them for practice.

Having been coached for the coming exercises, the boys continued their researches in the libraries so that they might be ready for the forty days' battle, which lasted from the first Monday of Lent until the Friday before Palm-Sunday. Every Saturday they were refreshed by prayers at eight o'clock in the morning at St. Mary's. On Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays the disputations took place in the afternoon from one o'clock to five, on questions taken from the logic of Aristotle. On Fridays they disputed on grammar, rhetoric, politics, and ethics from nine to twelve in the morning. George, as a Determining Bachelor, was an Opponent twice against students of the lower ranks, each of whom defended propositions; that is, they "responded under a Bachelor in Quadragesima." Theoretically at least George was supposed to criticize the arguments of the younger men and finally to sum up or determine the question.

Having 'stood in Quadragesima.' as the exercise was called, for forty days, the Determining Bachelors met for the last time on the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, said their prayers, and heard a speech by the Vice-Chancellor in which he praised or criticized the way they had handled the questions, and congratulated them on the attainment of their Bachelor's Degree. Naturally the boys celebrated the occasion by a great feast, paid for by the 'Collectors' from the fees charged for arranging the disputations.

In all of the disputations which have been mentioned Calvert and his mates were controlled by the Heads of the University. These men, made wise by years of experience with the undergraduate mind, always passed upon the questions beforehand, in order to block the discussion of trivial or tabooed propositions. They allowed no one to argue on controversial problems of the political world or on unorthodox religious questions; for the University was tied to the established church and the Throne. All philosophical doctrines concerning God, the eternity of the world, the immortality of the soul, and others of like character were to be conformable and attempered to the Christian dogmas. Thus did those in authority seek to stamp out impiety and to imbue the coming generation with a true and undefiled religion, as it was understood by the party in power.

In addition to religious conformity, Calvert, as a disputant, was obliged to stick close to Aristotle, for that great master, according to the Statutes of the University, was supreme. Whenever a student discussed rhetorical, political, or moral questions, he was required to quote Aristotle and the Peripatetics in support. Failure to bring them into the argument as authorities was penalized severely, either by not counting the disputation or by fining the guilty student heavily as often as he committed the offense. It is probable that Calvert conformed in all respects to the requirements, revealing himself at that time of his life to be a devoted Aristotelian, Anglican, and Elizabethan.

Although he had been admitted to his degree in February and had passed the Lenten disputations, the College year did not close until after the great Commencement early in July. To this academic celebration George probably invited his folks and other gentry of the neighborhood. A rich program awaited those who came down from Yorkshire, provided they understood Latin, and if they did not, there were in Oxford town numerous social events and delightful shops.

The Commencement of the Class of '97 began on 'Act Saturday,' when Vespereal Disputations were held by the different faculties. One of the questions presented by the philosophical department must have deeply interested Calvert. It was entitled, "The planting of colonies strengthens rather than weakens a nation." According to the custom of scholastic disputation, the performers cited ancient Greek and Roman authorities, and probably made some mention of Frobisher, Raleigh, and other explorers. Who can deny that this proposition and others of like character, discussed during his course, may have set in motion that train of activities which eventually led him to Avalon and Jamestown, and finally caused him to ask Charles I for the Charter of Maryland?

When the philosophers had 'kept their act,' the lawyers put

William Aubrey in the Respondent's chair to defend three legal questions:

- "1. Whether the children of two brothers or two sisters should be united in marriage?"—Decided in the Affirmative.
- "2. Whether things taken by the enemy and recovered ought to be restored to the first owner?"—Affirmative.
- "3. Whether a contract without a consideration can produce an action?"—Negative.

The Medicals, probably lacking candidates, presented no disputations. The Theologians, however, filled the gap fully by letting loose nine champions who were prepared to defend twenty-seven questions, dealing with the authenticity of the Scriptures, predestination, freedom of the will, the authority of the Pope, the temporal power of the church, and others connected with the Thirty-nine Articles. Robert Inkforby, for example, maintained that "Rome is Babylon." William Vaughan declared that "The souls of those who were faithful before the coming of Christ are in heaven." John Harding ventured the opinion that "The vernacular versions of the Scriptures ought to be available to all, irrespective of persons."

Let it be known at this point that if Calvert's folks came down to Oxford expecting to hear their beliefs upheld, they were gratified to the full, for the institution put on a thoroughly orthodox program. Nevertheless they must have been rather nonplussed when they heard views diametrically opposite expressed by the speakers, for a disputation involved a pro and a con. Hence in spite of preconceived notions, the auditors were forced to sit still, while the most heretical ideas were advanced, supposedly, of course, to be overthrown. Thus did young Calvert get the Catholic point of view in a Protestant University, a point of view which years afterward he openly adopted.

Passing next over a Sunday filled with special music and doctrinal sermons, the Yorkshire visitors were ushered on Monday to the 'Act Comital,' which was held in the presence of a distinguished gathering of scholars arrayed in gorgeous academic costumes, and of the public clad in such finery as fashion might dictate. Again there was a program of disputations handled by the brightest minds in the University. Each department presented the usual three questions, only a few of which will be given, namely, those of the Department of Theology. It seems that the original questions submitted by the disputants had been turned down by the Congregation. In their places others were substituted:

- “ 1. The polity or rule of the Anglican Church does not conflict with divine law.”
- “ 2. The same kingdom ought not tolerate diverse religions.”
- “ 3. Without consulting of parents no betrothal ought to be contracted, nor marriage.”

It must be admitted that such an intellectual program, delivered in Latin, would hardly be appreciated by a general Commencement audience of our day, nor indeed, if the truth were known, did it appeal to every one in Calvert's day. There were, however, two means by which the exercises were lightened, one of which was the distribution of verses written by the disputants, and the other was a comic disputation by the Terrae Filius. This roguish ‘Son of the Earth’ was a licensed buffoon who “split the ears of the groundlings” as well as those of distinguished scholars who had come up or down to Oxford, by lambasting the Vice-Chancellor, the Professors, Beadles, and the institution in general. Those who had had their imperious way in the class-rooms and lecture-halls were now roasted to a turn in the presence of a sympathetic audience. There was no escape, for the Statutes required a Terrae Filius. If his appearance were interdicted on account of scurrility the year before, there would be a great deal to do over the breaking of the University's law; for the crowd loved a witty Terrae Filius. As a way out of the dilemma the Heads fell back upon a section of the Statutes that forbade scurrilous and indecent language, and gave them the right to suspend, expel, or imprison the fellow who dared to defame the fair name of the University or to besmirch its learned Professors. Sometimes the overhanging threat worked, and sometimes it failed. If the audacious student would not recant on bended knees, a 'bannimus' was posted, whereupon he vanished from collegiate circles. As Calvert graduated successfully it is probable that he was a law-abiding student; at least in the list of Terrae Filii his name does not appear.

One final ceremony concluded his course at Oxford; that is, the Commencement dinner—an immemorial custom, continued to this day in nearly all colleges. At Oxford there were many dinners, furnished by wealthy graduates, who in a gastronomic way topped their education. One George Nevill of Balliol College spread three tables before two hundred and sixty guests with sufficient viands to keep their jaws busy for two days. As George Calvert was not plentifully supplied with funds, he probably avoided excessive expenditure.

Although he had now completed the required course and received his degree, Calvert's education was by no means complete. According to a custom prevailing among students, a continental tour was necessary to round out his training. This tour was made in company with other young men, who travelled through France and Italy, viewing in person the scenes of which they had read and heard, as well as acquiring a conversational knowledge of modern languages. It has been assumed that Calvert learned these tongues at college, but such training is rather improbable, for the subjects were not in the curriculum, and further Calvert must have been very busy with the regular course, which he completed in three years. If he did pursue them, he must have been under some private tutor, who could at most have given him only the rudiments. It is more reasonable to assume that Calvert's knowledge of Italian, at least, was acquired while in Italy. Certainly he absorbed enough to be attracted by a proverb which he afterward adopted as the heraldic motto of the Calverts: "Fatti Maschii Parole Femine"—"Deeds for Men, Words for Women."

On his return to England Calvert put his knowledge of Latin, French and Italian to use in the State Department under Cecil.

Success came to him, for he won the goodwill of King James I. That scholarly monarch decided to make a progress to Oxford in August, 1605, conveying with him Cecil, Calvert, and many others. To do honor to the distinguished visitors, the Convocation voted to confer the Master's Degree upon Privy Councillors, Earls, Barons, other nobles, and "equites aurati et alii egregii viri—knights bachelor and other notable men," and to incorporate certain Cambridge Masters and Bachelors. Calvert of Trinity, then in his twenty-fifth year, came under the heading of 'notables,' while his friend and patron, Cecil, was grouped with the Cambridge men, who by a fine courtesy existing within the 'republic of letters' could be incorporated as Oxford men. On that same day, August 30, 1605, there were added to the Registered Masters of Arts, by creation, one Duke, five Earls, one Viscount, one Bishop, four Barons, three Lords, twenty Knights, and eight Esquires (the last one being Calvert), in addition to seventeen Cambridge Masters and one Cambridge Bachelor of Divinity, John Oliver.

As George Calvert sat among these eminencies, the last man in the lowest rank, he did not dream that he was to rise through Knighthood to a Baronage and to become the inceptor of a great free state three thousand miles away. At the time he was content to receive an honor, to renew his college associations, and to attune his mind to the disputations which were provided by the learned Doctors of the various faculties. No mere students were allowed to perform in the presence of King Jamy, for he was himself a man of parts, being able to speak Latin and to expound demonology and other theologic lore. First on the program came an 'Act in Divinity,' introduced by the Vice-Chancellor, who read the accompanying verses and announced the questions:

- "1. Whether Saints and Angels know the thoughts of the heart?"
- "2. Whether in time of pestilence Pastors of churches ought to visit the sick?"

Calvert and other Oxford men knew that when a plague struck the town the pastors generally left town in spite of the Biblical injunction, to "visit the sick." The King took such a lively interest in the question that he called for a Testament, hunted for a well-known passage, and, when he had found it, so says the reporter, "stood up and sayd Audi, Audi (Hear, hear) . . . read the place and then readily and eloquently expounded the meaning." Calvert and his friends must have winked at each other when they heard the conceited King butt into a disputation.

Later in the day the King showed that he was an allrounder by joining in a legal discussion. He warmed up to such an extent that he took the questions out of the hands of the Moderator and settled them himself. The Law Department had put forward these questions:

- "1. Whether a judge in giving his decision should be required to follow the legal proofs brought forth in the trial, contrary to the truth known privately by himself?"
- "2. Whether decisions and agreements should be made in good faith or in strict justice?"

In the following way did the reporter happily narrate the effect of the royal intrusions: "After the King first spoke, the Scholars began a Plaudite; at the second time, the graver men, crying in the end Vivat Rex. At the third time, the Prince, Nobility and all, and they with great vehemency." Jamy was having a delightful time.

The next day he came back for more. A question that dealt with Raleigh and the use of tobacco had been picked by the Physicians because the King had recently published "A Counterblast to Tobacco." It was worded:

"Whether frequent inhalation of foreign Nicotine is beneficial to health?"

As Jamy listened to the arguments in favor of the use of tobacco he became more and more excited. At last he leaped from his seat and declared that he had never heard such weak reasoning. Fancy trying to prove "by an enumeration or induction that tobacco must need be good, because Kings, Princes, Nobles, Earles, Lords, Knights, Gentlemen of all countries and nations loved it. The King gave instance that there was one King that neither loved it nor liked it, which moved great delight." It was possible that a great deal of the delight was caused by the courtiers showing each other their pipes. Whether Calvert was addicted to the use of 'sot-weed' at that time is not known, but certain it is that the colony afterward founded by him drew its revenues largely from tobacco.

Later in the day the Philosophers attracted great interest by their arguments on the production of gold artificially. Nearly everybody believed that the baser metals could be transmuted into gold. The King had even succumbed to the blandishments of an alchemist who promised to enrich the royal coffers. When Jamy saw no returns from his investment, he began to bargain with colonial promotion companies, giving them liberal charters in return for a one-fifth of all precious metals obtained during their exploitation. Another question presented by the Philosophers was timely, for it involved the Spanish Armada and the expeditions to America. Young Calvert must have listened with deep interest to the pros and cons of this disputation:

"Whether to defend the bounds of a Kingdom is better than to enlarge the same?"

When the last of these highly intellectual academic exercises had been determined by the Moderators and the Masters had been created, George Calvert's college career was completed. From that time he devoted himself to King and country and University, even going so far as to represent the Oxford district in Parliament. His future education, if a life work may be so called, was practical and political, tinged, of course, to some extent by his academic courses. Without those college courses he could not have held high positions in the government. In memory of that College career and of subsequent achievements a great preparatory school in Baltimore has placed upon its outer walls a full length statue of George Calvert, graduate of Oxford University, A. B. in course, and A. M. by creation.

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS.

REMBRANDT PEALE TO CHARLES F. MAYER.

Philad^a Oct. 12, 1830.

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of informing you that I arrived from my European trip on Thursday last with my health very much improved—indeed it was only in Rome that I discovered how very precarious was the tenure of my existence, and not until I fixed my self in Florence that I found my constitution entirely renovated from the shocks it had received prior to my leaving Baltimore—chiefly the consequences of mental excitements. Still retaining my devotion to the Arts, I sought their Cradle in Italy and the scenes of their maturity, where the dreams of my early youth were realized in the possession of the most precious objects. I return from the feast not only refreshed and instructed, but without any loss of time and with a renewed lease of my life.

On other occasions you may hear more on this subject—at present I hasten to write you in relation to the business you have undertaken for my brother Rubens. On my arrival he put into my hands several papers, with some verbal explanations, that I might examine the subject here, as soon as I should find time after meeting my family. We have so much to say together that I can scarcely now attend to anything like business—yet as I find the 15th of October named for you to resume the business, I can perceive no excuse for delay or indecision. I am extremely sorry that he should have introduced my name, especially as a party aggrieved, without my knowledge or consent in any suit whatever. For tho' it does not appear on an examination of the Act of Incorporation of the Baltimore Museum, that the stock created under the authority of the Trustees who were named in it, but who never met me to act as such, was intended to command an interest to be paid out of the receipts and profits of the Museum;—yet it is certain that as the money which I received for the stock was advanced for the consideration of the 8 per cent. when money was not otherwise to be obtained, I consented to take it on such a condition not without hopes that the Receipts and profits of the institution would enable me within the 8 years, to buy in all the stock. The times became unfortunate in Baltimore and I suffered in the general calamity. But it is more especially necessary for you to now recollect that my difficulties were greatly aggravated by the misfortunes of my connection with the gas company. The idea of such an enterprise originated with me and I was entitled to some of the advantages that might be derived from it—and would have enjoyed them largely had my plans, in co-operation with Mr. Gwynn, been carried into effect; but unfortunately the evils that fell upon the company arose almost entirely out of the misconceptions of Mr. Long and Col. Mosher with whom I was associated as a Committee, and who uniformly overruled and thwarted my designs—and then censured me for the errors which they had committed. The Museum consequently suffered by the want of my time and attention and the labours of J. Griffiths which were for a long time devoted to laborious tho' unavailing efforts to remedy the evils resulting from my coadjutors insisting on a bad scite, resisting my desires to make contracts with workmen &c &c. But what was worst of all to me, the unjust and severe conduct of those gentlemen had an effect on my nerves and mind most injurious to my family and nearly destructive to my life. For this they can never make me a sufficient compensation. The Museum was sacrificed—my fondest purposes blasted—I gave up all that I could—but I could not give up all, as I would have done had I been without wife and children. What I reserved was with the approving judgment of Mr.

Gwynn and is now under your kind management for my benefit.

But for the evils thus brought upon me by the gas business I should have been able to manage the affairs of the Museum, in spite of all other difficulties and without seeking the advantages of the law in its favourable construction of the clause which relates to the interest of stock. Had I sought any such assistance or advice it might then have operated to invite some favourable compromise which would have been mutually advantageous—But I have never hesitated for an instant as to the course of my duty, and cannot now consent to derive any advantages from law that would be at variance with justice or honour.

My brother Rubens having bought the Museum of me, as it stood on the 1st of May 1822, agreed to assume all my personal responsibilities in Baltimore, as they were stated to him by Mr. Robinson and me. His situation afterwards was not liberally considered by all the parties with whom he was involved and he was forced to withdraw himself from Baltimore where his zeal and efforts would have been so honourable to the city. Reluctant compromises have held him in part, but it is manifest that it should have been made his interest to concentrate in Baltimore the labours which he has divided between that city and New York. It is not to the credit of Baltimore that the liberal views and purposes of science should be sacrificed by the sordid calculations of shortsighted commercial avarice.

It was impossible for my brother, especially without my books, to make any correct statement of the expenses of the Museum, tho' the Receipts were always accurately registered. Unfortunately for me Mr. Long, in whom I confided, chose an unfavourable situation, and instead of making me a building for 5000 dollars, erected one that cost upwards of 14 thousand—part of which I finished myself. All the improvements made were with the sole view of completing an establishment which should be valued for its attractions and estimated by the number of its visitors. I therefore kept no account of subsequent expenditures and it would be impossible to do anything but guess at them, except in a few particulars. In the statement which my brother has made, from Aug. 1814 till May 1822 he has underrated some of them and much overrated others. From 1822, when he took possession, to 1825 he is probably more correct, as he has been in the habit of keeping memoranda of all his own expenses. Should you deem it necessary to have any more information from me I will endeavour to give you satisfaction—but I shall be sorry to be compelled to act in the slightest degree contrary to my peaceable habits or to favour the most remote suspicion that I can desire anything that the strictest justice and honour can forbid.

As I must hasten back to New York to arrange my business there and endeavour to decide whether to settle there or here, I cannot now re-examine the papers you forwarded to me at Florence through Coleman Sellers, relative to the Stock business—but as soon as my leisure will permit I shall write you expressly on that subject, as some topics require elucidation.

With my most sincere thanks for your perservering efforts to do me the good which may be in your power and the kindness of your sentiments, permit me to conclude this hasty and rather imperfect explanation.

Dear Sir

With Respect, esteem and gratitude

Yours

Rembrandt Peale.

C. F. Mayer, Esq^r Baltimore.

RUBENS PEALE TO CHARLES F. MAYER.

New York.

C. Mayer, Esq.

Dr. Sir,

Yours of the 9th is before me. A few days since Rembrandt shewed me his letter to you. I told him that you could draw no conclusion whatever from it, all that I require from him, was a wright to receive any amounts that may have been paid by him, over what ought to have been paid to the stockholders in justice. (Interest on the amounts subscribed, out of the receipts and profits of the Museum, up to, and not exceeding 8 per cent.) or in other words, that he should make the sale of the museum complete to me, authorising me to receive any amounts due to him on the museum, as well as the debts due by him on account of the museum. And this he promised to do, if the deed of sale (which is in your possession) does not fully express this intention—therefore if you will be so good as to examine it, and if necessary send him a document to that effect, and he will sign it immediately. He only wanted to avoid joining in a suit against the Trustees, which was the whole amount of his letter to you, or that part of it, that did not relate to the gas business.

The Trustees having agreed to take an annual payment of 5 percent on the amount subscribed, will prevent their power to have a receiver appointed, although on examination you may find, that legally they had no wright to make such an arrangement with me.

Now as I have appointed Mr. S. D. Walker, my full power of attorney, to act in all cases connected with the museum, I should take it kind in you to receive his opinion on all the points where you may require information, just the same as though it were myself as he is equally interested in the property with myself, (only it is not known) as his name is not made use of only as my attorney in the business.

If the Trustees would concent to take all my wright, title and interest in the Museum, and release me fully from all payments connected with it, such as the arrearage on their interest, the cost and expences of the removal &c I should be perfectly satisfied, (if it meets Mr. Walker's approbation).

I therefore leave it to you and Mr. Walker to come to some positive conclusion, with them, and if it is necessary for me to be in Baltimore, I can leave immediately after the 25th Instant but not before. The Trustees ought accept of an easy adjustment of the whole business, as they have nothing to expect from me, I have no property to loose except what I have in the Baltimore Museum. I am only transacting the business here as agent for others—if they were aware of this they would find it needless to persevere in their demands on me, but take it into their own hands totally, and relieve me from further anxiety, it is now in a good situation and they may be benefited by it.

If they make an equitable arrangement and examine the Museum accounts, they will find that I have done much for the improvement and interest of the Museum, not only in adding to it, but much time spent, besides what is charged.

If I could conveniently have left the City now I should have done so instead of writing this letter.

I remain your friend & humble servant,

Rubens Peale.

COLONIAL RECORDS OF CAROLINE AND HARFORD COUNTIES.

CONTRIBUTED BY LOUIS DOW SCISCO.

Both Caroline and Harford Counties were created by acts of the General Assembly which met near the close of 1773. County organization followed in 1774. Created thus on the eve of the Revolution, they had but a short existence in the colonial period and the record libers to be listed are necessarily few.

The present Caroline County court house at Denton was built in 1895. The record rooms are just reaching the condition of being crowded. Thus far neither of the record offices has been forced to use storage rooms for overflow material. Steel shelving and file cases have been installed recently. In the clerk's office the older record material has been preserved with some completeness. Files of loose papers are preserved from 1775 onward. The record libers of the colonial time are as follows:

Liber marked "Commission Record Liber A" carries 375 pages of court orders dating from August, 1774, to about October, 1793, and largely relating to property bounds. The book has also 48 pages of a fee record from February, 1774, to October, 1792. This fee record, from April, 1774, onward is practically a marriage license record, inasmuch as the names of the licensed parties are given with each fee entry.

Liber A of deeds has 900 pages of conveyances entered from March, 1774, to February, 1786. Pages 1-241 carry those recorded to the close of 1777. On pages 261-267 is the record of persons taking the oath of fidelity in 1778.

Liber in parchment covers without legible title contains 50 unnumbered pages of orphans court minutes from March, 1774, to August, 1777, and 500 numbered pages of criminal session records from 1779 to 1785.

Liber in parchment covers without legible title has 553 pages of criminal session minutes from March, 1774, to November, 1778. In this liber are also 6 pages of estrays and stock marks from April, 1774, to April, 1787.

Liber marked "Judgments Liber No. A" has 902 pages of court proceedings from August, 1774, to June, 1786.

Liber in paper covers has 34 pages of rough minutes for the court sessions of March, 1775, to January 4, 1776, with 5 more pages listing fines for minor offences in 1775.

Liber with cover title "Session 1775 & 1776" is a docket book for criminal sessions of 1775 and 1776, which entries are followed by an early draft of the regular court proceedings of March, 1775, to May, 1777.

The office of the register of wills has the following colonial books. The fact that Caroline County was formed partly from Dorchester, explains the early dates shown by these record volumes. It is understood by the register that these libers are transcriptions from original Dorchester records and that they relate only to the present Caroline area, but the libers have the appearance of being themselves the originals of Dorchester. Filed papers of the colonial period occupy four file cases marked respectively 1680-1774, 1741-1774, 1761-1774, 1774-1783.

Liber C C No. A of wills recorded from 1688 to 1777, 208 pages.

Liber of inventories, with label "1697 to 1776," 412 pages.

Liber of administration accounts, "1703 to 1776," 181 pages.

Harford County has its court house at Bel Air. Its former court house there was burned about 1857. The present building, erected about 1858, was enlarged and remodeled to its present form about 1898. The record offices have ample space and modern equipment. In the clerk's office, besides the usual land and court records on the open shelves of the public record room, is an adjoining small room lined with cupboards which are filled with court records of various kinds, both in books and as jacketed papers. Another large quantity of disused record material fills the shelves of a third-floor jury room. Brief inspection reveals that both of these storage collections have records dating from the county's beginnings.

There are no known libers of court minutes extant for the colonial period. The regular series of so-called judgment libers in the public record room begins with 1798. The storage material includes a group of small docket books carrying session calendars and imparlances of 1774 to 1779. The following list of land-record libers spans the country's few years of colonial existence. These books are probably in part transcripts of early date, for there are frequent instances of entries wholly out of time sequence with surrounding matter but with no variation therefrom in penmanship.

Liber A L 1, marked "1773 to 1776," contains 491 pages of deeds and mortgages recorded from March, 1774, to July, 1776, and interspersed entries of bonds, manumissions, and leases.

Liber J L G No. F, marked "1774 to 1786," begins with pages 1-59 of miscellaneous bills of sale, manumissions, indentures, bonds, mortgages, and like papers, entered from March, 1774, to November, 1775. From page 60 similar entries continue from August, 1778, until 1784, when the liber becomes a regular registry of deeds until its close in September, 1787. This matter fills 495 pages and is followed by 18 pages of estrays entered from April, 1774, to June, 1783.

Liber J L G No. A, marked "1777 to 1778," has 444 pages of deeds and mortgages. Entries from July, 1776, to May, 1777, are on pages 202-366, entries from May, 1777, to July, 1778, occupy pages 1-201, entries from July to September, 1778, occupy pages 366-421, and six papers entered late in 1778 close the record. This liber also has occasional entries of bills of sale and other papers.

The records of the office of register of wills seem to be nearly complete for the earlier years of the county.

Liber A J No. 1 of wills has 533 pages of entries arranged alphabetically from Q to Z and ranging in time from 1774 to 1785.

Liber A J No. 2 of wills has 271 pages of entries arranged from A to P.

Liber of inventories marked "1777 to 1787" has 293 pages.

Liber of administration accounts marked "1774-91" has 528 pages.

COMMISSION BOOK, 82.

The eighteenth century folio known as "Commission Book No. 82" is in reality one of the records of the Council of Maryland and contains all sorts of miscellaneous entries from July 1733 to 1773, covering 347 pages. There are many commissions recorded, together with ship registries, Inductions to Clergymen, licenses to preach, naturalizations and denizations, receipts for arms and ammunition, pardons and reprieves, and other miscellaneous entries. A few of the commissions and pardons are entered in full in the involved legal verbiage of the period, but the majority of the items are briefly entered, covering only two to three lines each. This transcript gives all essential information contained in the original manuscript, but so arranged as to emphasize the personal names mentioned. For obvious reasons, a few items, such as the pardon of "Negro Jack," which in the original covers three pages, is entirely omitted. The numbers in parentheses refer to the pages of the original Mss. There is an unexplained break in this record between 1751 and 1761, which corresponds with a similar lapse in the record of the Court of Appeals.

Another Commission Book, 1726 to 1786, also a record of the Council, contains all of the major commissions issued in that period.

Other commissions are to be found in the published volumes of the Archives.—[Editor.]

THE HOLLYDAY FAMILY.

By HENRY HOLLYDAY.

THE ARMS.

Hollyday (of London). Sa: three close helmets, arg., garnished or., within a bordure engrailed of the second.

Hollyday (of London and of Bromley in Middlesex). Sa: three helmets, arg., garnished or., within a bordure, two and one.

Crest: "A demi lion, rampant, gardant, or, supporting an anchor all proper, or, resting his paws on an anchor."

Motto: Used by Col. Thomas Hollyday and his descendants: "Nulli virtute secundus." Granted Sir Walter Hollydaye, by Edward IV of England, May 4, 1470. Regranted to his great-great grandson, Sir Leonard Hollyday, on September 23, 1605, when Lord Mayor of London.¹

The history of the Hollyday family is one of the most noted of the Lowland families of Scotland. (Being of the "Scottish Chiefs".) For centuries prior to the year A. D. 1500, the chiefs were engaged in warfare with their Highland neighbors and were also at war with the Saxons. This clan or tribe was known as "The Annandale Clan," and its chief, styled "Laird of Covehead," near Dumfries.

SIR THOMAS HOLLYDAY (HALLADAYE or HOLLYDAYE), the earliest of the name, was a great patriot, and owned considerable estates in Annandale. He was succeeded by his son,

SIR THOMAS HOLLYDAY, who married the daughter of Sir Malcolm Wallace (son of the noted Sir William Wallace, Kt.), in the year 1297. His descendant, Robert Hollyday, settled in Northumberland County, England, about the year 1391. Another descendant, Thomas Hollyday, commanded two hundred archers at the battle of Agincourt in France, A. D. 1415; and his grandson Walter Hollyday, settled in Gloucester County, England.

1. SIR WALTER HOLLYDAY was the youngest son of the last "Laird of Covehead," Chieftain of Annandale, and chief of all who bore the name. Having settled at Minchin Hampton, Gloucestershire, England, he acquired vast estates, became prominent, especially during the reign of King Edward IV, who made him a Knight and granted him arms as above described, for valor and bravery, etc., at the battle of Tewkesbury (at the junction of the Severn and Avon Rivers), on May 4th, 1470. He died in the year A. D. 1500, and was succeeded by his son,

2. HENRY HOLLYDAY, of Minchin Hampton, married Miss Payne of "Payne's Court," near Frome, and had four sons, viz:

3. I. Henry, of Minchin Hampton,
- II. Edward, of Rodboro,' (of whom hereafter).
- III. William, of Stroud, and
- IV. John, of Frome Hall.

3. EDWARD HOLLYDAY (Henry,² Walter¹) of Rodborough, near Gloucester, England, where he lived and built the "Hollyday Mansion" on Dowell Hill. This house was standing in the year 1700 and owned by a descendant, William Hollyday. "The Ancient and Present State of Gloucester," published about that year, says: "Mr. Hollyday has a good home and estate. Sir Leonard Hollyday, Lord-mayor and Alderman of London, was born here." Edward Hollyday was succeeded by his son,

4. SIR WILLIAM HOLLYDAY, (Edward³, Henry², Walter¹,) who succeeded to the estates of his father, was a man of great prominence, was knighted, but died young. He married in 1548 Sarah Bridges, aunt of Lord Chandas, and they had issue, as follows:

ISSUE ²

5. I. Sir Leonard Hollyday, of whom hereafter,
- II. Edward Hollyday, married Margaret Townsend,
- III. Henry Hollyday, died young in 1583.

5. SIR LEONARD HOLLYDAY (William⁴, Edward³, Henry², Walter¹,) went to London, and made great success. In July, 1594, he was elected Alderman of Portsoken, of Broad Street; of Bassishaw in 1600. On April 18th, 1610, was elected Sheriff of London. He was knighted by King James II on September 23rd, 1605; was made Lord Mayor of London in 1605, and served during the year 1606. In 1605/6 he was President of Bridewell and Bethlem Hospitals, and also a member of the Levant Court.

During his Mayoralty occurred the "Gunpowder Plot," (15, Nov. 1605) for which Sir Edward Digby and three others were executed.

When, during a visit in July, 1606, Christian IV, King of Denmark (brother of the Queen Consort) rode through London, accompanied by the King of England in great style, he was preceded by Sir Leonard Hollyday, the Lord-Mayor, bearing a golden sceptre. His pageant, performed at the cost of his company, was written up by Anthony Munday and entitled "The Triumphs of the Re-united Brittanium."³

Sir Leonard married on May 21st, 1578, Anne Wincoll, of St. Edmund, Lombard Street, London, who was the daughter

HOLLYDAYS IN EARLY VIRGINIA.

The question who Colonel Thomas Hollyday, the founder of the Maryland family, was and where he came from leads us to survey the Hollydays of Virginia, whence he would be most likely to come. This is what we find:

Thomas Hollyday appears in James City County, Va., in

1651.⁵ In 1656 he acquired 350 acres of land on James River, near Jamestown Island, in James City County, Va., said tract being called "Darcy Oatly," originally patented to a certain Samuel Matthews. In 1661 a Patent was granted for the same tract to Thomas Hollyday by Coll. Fra. Moryson, Esq., Governor. Thomas Hollyday signs his name on the Original Record "Thomas Hollyday." (note the spelling).⁶

There was a will at Williamsburg, dated 1660/1, in which the testator, viz: Thomas Hollyday, mentions a son Thomas Hollyday, but as the records were burned during the War between the States, this cannot be verified.⁷

In Hayden's History of Virginia it is stated that "Thomas Hollyday who went to Maryland, was the son of Thomas Hollyday of Va. 1660." This was furnished by a Mr. Holliday, of Portsmouth, Va. This statement is also verified in a letter from his daughter (Miss Holliday) to a Mrs. Bernis Brien, of Dayton, Ohio (descendant of the Virginia Holliday family). This, Mrs. Brien wrote the author under date of Sept. 5th, 1925.

George Billingsley, who owned Billingsley Point in Prince George's County, Maryland, was from James City County, Va. Also was Barnaby Kearne, afterwards of Maryland. In the will of George Billingsley (Upper Norfolk, Va.) dated Dec. 21, 1681, he devises to "Barnaby Kearne and hrs. 200 A. residue of Billingsleys Point."⁸ William Mills, of James City Co., Va., also owned at one time Darcy Oatly, tract. He came to Maryland.

Of the Early Settlers, who came into Maryland, were:

1. April 16th, 1677, John Holliday was brought in to St. Mary's County, by Richard Taylor.⁹

⁷ Letter from Miss Hattie Gilliam to author, April 26, 1907.

⁸ Liber 4, 118, Md. Wills.

⁹ Book No. 15, fol. 401.

This may have been the brother of Col. Thomas Hollyday, 1st. of Maryland.

2. January 27, 1675, Thomas Kempe, of Calvert County, brought into the Providence Henry Hollyday and Margery Kemp.¹⁰

3. Robert Hollyday, came in December, 1665.¹¹

4. William Hollyday, wife, four children, and servants, came into the Province, in 1681. Col. Hollyday, had brothers "William and Robert."¹²

A Silver waiter, now in possession of author, said by Tiffany of New York, to be genuine, and entered about the year 1697, which waiter has been owned continuously and in the possession of the descendants of Col. Thomas Hollyday, shows the Arms, being the same as granted Sir. Leonard Hollyday, in 1605.

The Tombstone of Col. Thomas Hollyday, who died in 1703, and was buried at Billingsley's Point, bore a Coat of Arms, as did also that of his son Col. Leonard Hollyday, who died in 1742 and was buried near Nottingham in Prince George's County, Md. Col. James Hollyday, of Readbourne (of whom hereafter), died in 1747, and his Tombstone, recently removed from Readbourne to the Cemetery at Easton, Maryland, is in a perfect state of preservation, with inscription and the Hollyday Arms, the same as grant—the Lord-Mayor, Sir Leonard. Letters from James Hollyday (his son) to William Anderson, Merchant of London, in 1750 and again in 1751, in reference to procuring of said Tombstone in possession of the author, gives instruction as to engraving "His Arms" thereon, etc.

Family tradition has been that Col. Thomas Hollyday, the founder of the family in Maryland, was the son of Capt. Thos. Hollyday, of Virginia, and a descendant of Sir Leonard Hollyday, the Lord-Mayor of London, 1605. The naming of his son "Leonard" and only daughter "Margery", strongly supports the above. Dr. Christopher Johnston, one of the most distinguished of American genealogists, and George Norbury Mackenzie, editor of "Colonial Families of the United States," had the same view. In a letter under date of Sept. 2, 1913, Dr. Johnston wrote the author. "These arms were borne by the Hollydays of Wiltshire & Somersetshire, but especially by the Hollydays of Rodborough, Co. Gloucester, to which branch Sir. Leonard Hollyday, Lord-Mayor of London in 1605, belonged. From the occurrence of the name "Leonard", I should judge that the family in Maryland considered themselves rather closely related to Sir Leonard Hollyday."

Many new facts have been discovered but none that contradict this assumption of descent from Sir. Leonard. To sum up the final conclusions which this author has drawn from all the data here presented, it is the author's opinion that Colonel Thomas Hollyday, who came to Maryland in 1679 and bought Billingsleys Point in 1684, was the son of Captain Thomas Hollyday, of James City County, Va., and the later was the son of John Hollyday and Mary Roult, of Bromley Kent, England, who was the only grand-son of Sir Leonard Hollyday, Lord-Mayor of London in 1605/6.

COL. THOMAS HOLLYDAY, son of Capt. Thomas Hollyday of Virginia, settled in Calvert County, Maryland, in the year 1679/80, when he brought into the Province eighteen persons, among whom was John Rolt or Roult for which he received certain grants. In 1682, he was granted a Patent for a tract of land on the West side of the Patuxent River called "Upper Guitting".¹³

On August 8, 1687, he purchased from the heirs of George Billingsley (late of the Colony of Virginia), "Billingsleys Point" lying in the fork of the Patuxent (then Calvert) in Prince George's County, containing 1069 acres, which was confirmed in his son Col. James Hollyday by Act of Assembly 1724.¹⁴ On this point he built the first Hollyday Mansion, still standing in 1930. The front of the grounds around the house slopes down in several terraces. The stairways at "Read-bourne" and "Rateliffe Manor" resemble in many respects.

The house, at the time of its being built about the year 1690, was evidently one of art and the place in general of great beauty and dignity.

Col. Hollyday, married (the exact date is not certain) about the year 1690, Mary Trueman, who was related to many of the Southern Maryland Families. She was the daughter of Dr. Trueman (then deceased) and Anne, his wife, formerly Anne Storer of England. Dr. Trueman died in October 1672, and in his will dated July 29th, 1672, he mentions his wife Anne, and his three daughters Martha (afterwards the wife of Thomas Greenfield), Mary (afterwards Mary Hollyday, wife of Colonel Thomas Hollyday) and Elizabeth (afterwards the wife of ——— Green, of Lynn, England). He does not mention a son, but brothers Nathaniel and Thomas Trueman.¹⁵

Mrs. Anne (Storer) Trueman, afterwards married Robert Skinner, whom she also survived, and by her will, she devised certain estate and property to daughter Greenfield and daughter Elizabeth Green (her daughter Mary Hollyday, being deceased), and each grandchild, 4.¹⁶ A grand daughter, ——— Green, married Sir William Brown, an eminent surgeon of "Queen's Square", London, who kept up quite a correspondence with his cousin Colonel James Hollyday (grandson of Colonel Thomas Hollyday) during the years 1750-67. Colonel Thomas Hollyday at once came into prominence, was influential and through relatives, closely identified with the Calverts, received numerous appointments. In 1690, he was commissioned by the Lord Proprietary, as a judge of the Calvert County Court and Captain of the Calvert Militia.¹⁷

When Prince George's County was formed in 1694, he was made, on March 3, 1694, Chief Judge of the County Court and Lieutenant Colonel. He was also one of the first Vestrymen of Saint Paul's Parish, at Upper Mount Calvert, 1692-1703. The Court minutes at Upper Marlboro, show that he sat as Presiding Judge of the Court from 1695 to 1703 (the year of his death) with great regularity.¹⁸

Colonel Hollyday was on more than one occasion called into the Military service of the Province, both while Captain of Calvert County and later as Lieutenant Colonel of Prince George's County. And it is not improbable that he had seen military service and training in Virginia as a young man. "Colonel Washington of Virginia and Captain Thomas Trueman of Calvert County, Maryland, had orders to join their forces with those of Colonel Thomas Hollyday, of Prince George's County, Maryland, to pursue Indian Marauders, in the year 1697." ¹⁹

Mrs. Mary (Trueman) Hollyday, died before her husband, and it is believed she died on the birth of her only daughter, Margery in 1699. Colonel Hollyday died in January, 1703, and was buried in the family cemetery at "Billingsley's Point".

James was named for his maternal grandfather James Trueman; Leonard for his paternal great-great-great grandfather Sir Leonard Hollyday, and Margery for Margery Kempe or possibly Margery Hollyday who died in England in 1682 and buried in Christ Church, Newgate Street, London.

Col. James Hollyday, eldest son of Col. Thomas and Mary Trueman Hollyday, was born in England on June 18, 1696, was educated at the Middle Temple, London, and was a lawyer. He settled in Talbot County in the year 1721, and on May 3rd, 1721, married Sarah (Covington) Lloyd, widow of Major Gen'l. pletion of the "Readbourne" Mansion House he removed to Queen Anne's County to this beautiful home on the Chester River. The Readbourne estate contained over 2000 acres of land, acquired by various Patents from the heirs of George Read and others. He inherited a large estate in Prince George's County, by his father's will; and upon his marriage with Mrs. Lloyd, was in control of large tracts of land, consisting over 20,000 acres in Talbot County. In 1724 he purchased "Readbourne" in Queen Anne's County. He at once became prominent in State affairs, being Private Attorney to Lord Baltimore. He was elected a Member of the House of Burgesses from Talbot County in 1728.²⁰ Served until 1732. Appointed Judge of Talbot County Court and one of the Quorum. Commission dated Feb. 26, 1726, and served until 1731.²¹ Appointed Justice of the Provincial Court of Maryland, 1732 and served until 1735, when he was nominated Colonel of Militia and Justice of Queen Anne's County Court. Named a member of Lord Baltimore's Council on July 15, 1735, and served until his death in 1747.²²

In Volumes XX and XXI of the Maryland Archives, "Proceedings of the Assembly, Col. Hollyday's name appears on most of the Important Committees of the Upper House, i. e. "Committee to prepare Acts of Assembly"—"To examine Accounts", etc. The record also shows that he was a most regular attendant upon the meetings of the Council. He died on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1747. The Annapolis Gazette of October 14th 1747, gives the following account of his death:

"Last Thursday morning (8, Oct., 1747) died in Queen Anne's County, after a long and lingering indisposition, which he bore with great patience and resignation, The Honorable James Hollyday, Naval Officer of the Port of Oxford, Treasurer of the Eastern Shore, and one of his Lordships Honorable Council. He left the character of a worthy Gentleman and good christian."

DR. CHARLES CARROLL, OF ANNAPOLIS.

July 5th 1753

Gent

I have seen M^r Dulanys further opinion on our Case relating to Yeates Forbearance and do not see that a Common warr^t taking in some Cultivation has any Analogy thereto I conceive it is not the Quantity of Land but the Right we have and that Right I take to be Consistant with Reason, but however certain I am thereof, I shall be as ready to give it up to avoid Litigation as any other of the Gent^t concerned, if it was a Case where a greater Quantity were held within the bounds Specified in a Patent, I think the Patentee would have a good right & the Lord prop^{ty} not injured The Case here is otherwise the man who resurveys has a right to do so and prays his Lord^{ps} Consent by his Officers thereto and takes the Resurvey in Lieu of the original as for instance in the Inclosed plan A: Takes a Warr^t of Resurvey on Black Acre which was originally 160 acres makes his Survey include but half the Original and adds vacancy makes the whole 279 acres by the name of white acre In his Lord^{sps} rent Roll Black Acre is no more an Entry is made resurveyed into white acre no rent paid for the former but only for the Latter and if Sale be made it is by the name of White Acre or if Ejectment or Dispute it is all by the Later Name and Patent as Title produced. The original 160 acres go to so much Composition towards the Latter 279 acres and there is 80 acres thereof left out in the Angle at: B: Now shall

A: or his Representatives hold the 80 acres at B: so left out by virtue of the original Grant altho it was part of the Composition for the 318 acres held by the Grant for White Acre, If he should I think it would be against the Common Practice Usage & Custom of the Country and as it appears to me contrary to plain Reason The part of white acre included into the Resurvey of black acre shall be deemed as held from the Original Survey & shall not affected by a Younger altho the Patent being in part vacated for the Patent of white acre is as much a Record as that of Black. And one Record may make Void another in part or in whole I should be as unwilling to promote the Doctrine of Vacating Grants as any man and I think the provincial Court was right in their Judgem^t nor ought the proprietor to take advantage of small Losses of his Tenant, Insisting upon our Case is no Ways simular to Such an Attempt it is only keeping a man to his own Act (or those deriving under him) who had full power to do such an Act. I shall give you no further Trouble on the occasion but refer whether you will give up Your right or Support it the Later I am for doing.

I Reced Yours yesterday dated the 8th Inst. desiring to have a messenger on Purpose Relating to dispatch Coll Champs Vessel in Relation to which the inclosed from myself & you will please to observe that one half the pig Iron is to be Charged to me & the other half to Mess^{rs} Daniel & Walter Dulany I think the Term half would have done as well but as that word occurred in the Inclosed it must now pass I hope Coll Champ's Vessell will be duly dispatched and the Skipper Treated kindly as usual with you I am with kind Service to M^{rs} Croxall.

M^r Unkles

I reced Yours dat^d 21st yesterday I believe Daley is so idle that he will make little or nothing if you could get a Tenant who would take the place, I would let him sow it with Rye or Wheat or what he liked directly pray look out for a good one, I will rent it cheap.

I would not willingly take Cesar away yet for that would be an Excuse with Daley but if he can spare him it is well for I will not sow any Time in the Ground being fully determined to take my Hands thence.

In Relation to the Addition to the Pines rectified I can Say no more than I said to you before in mine where I sent you a plan & the Courses sent to the survey: & I have now also inclosed the Courses which I would have returned which is agreeable to your first Intention of the Addition to the Pines as also to take in the Land to Join to Shriers Bottom which you recommended but if you Judge proper to mend any Stringing or Error so as not to depart from the main Intention of taking in the Clear Lands & Improvements with the good Lands do it, but pray be Carefull that no future mistake is committed this I refer entirely to your Conduct.

I will get Two Shirts made for Philip and send them to him soon he must not deal or Contract for money it is not to be had I have goods fit for men or Women, but I really cannot get money by any method. I have therefore I do not myself contract for money. Pray be so kind as to rectifie these Survey with Care as soon as you Can & Give them to M^r Howard keeping Copys of which send me one of Each when done. It will be very acceptable to me that you find Buyers for the Lands I wrote to sell and a good Tenant or Buyer for the Stage, I hope this will Come safe that you will be able to Comply with my Desires therein soon.

To Mr Unkle Unkles

P. S. You will please to observe that I had my Special warr^t to resurvey the Pines as well as the Addition w^{ch} occasions taking in the original Survey of the Pines you may add more if needfull.

I hope before this Time you have settled the Addition 150 a^s between Piney & Pipe Creek so as to include good Land & to answer the Expression in the Cert: of the Beginning and that you have bounded the Trees or Tree accordingly let me not Suffer by delaying this matter Pray let me know whether the Land Called Hazard of which you inclosed the Courses be good and what it includes whether as you expected, I have had it patented some Time but Hall does not close with me about it.

Brevard I hear is gone to Kent County I suppose I must look for a Chap for the Land Called the adventure taken up for him it is likewise patented long before any other Survey as the former is also.

July 24th 1753

Sir last Saturday in the afternoon I reced Yours dated the 13th Inst: demanding 6000 odd Hundred lbs Tob^o Costs you say due to you from me in the Court of Appeals with a Threat if I do not pay, I have ever been ready to pay any just or legal Demands on me & I paid you in that Cause & Court a large Sum lately If this Claim you now make be Justly due I shall be ready to pay it according to Law that is in money as I make no Tob^o if I Cannot procure the Latter but I think it is an exorbitant sume & might have been avoided without a strong Inclination to load me with Costs altho the Courts have ordered me to pay Costs it has not any pa^rlar Sume I will refer it to the Court if your Claim be Just & if so determined I will pay it at the next Sitting.

THE FIRST UNIFORM SCHOOL SYSTEM OF MARYLAND, 1865-1868.

By L. E. BLAUCH,

Professor of Education, North Carolina College for Women.

1. THE CONSTITUTION OF 1864.

The Maryland Constitution of 1864 was the first legal enactment for a uniform system of public schools in Maryland, excepting the rather abortive law for primary schools in 1826.¹ The constitution required the Governor to appoint a State superintendent of public instruction who was to report to the General Assembly in 1865 a plan for a uniform system of free public schools.² It was the responsibility of the General Assembly to provide a uniform system of free public schools, and in case it failed to discharge this obligation the system reported by the State Superintendent was to become the system of free public schools of Maryland. The Constitution also provided for an ex officio State Board of Education, for county school commissioners, for a State school tax, and for a permanent State school fund.

2. REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT VAN BOKKELEN.

In accordance with the Constitution Governor Bradford on November 12, 1864, appointed Rev. Libertus Van Bokkelen

² Maryland Constitution, 1864, Art. VIII.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction.³ Mr. Van Bokkelen was a native of New York, where he had been educated, had taught school, and had taken holy orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church.⁴ In 1845 he came to Catonsville, Maryland, as rector of St. Timothy's Church. Here he founded St. Timothy's Hall, an excellent private school. He became well known and was offered a number of positions, among which were the presidency of St. John's College and the presidency of the Maryland Agricultural College, but he declined all of them. He became connected with the public schools by serving for a number of years as a school commissioner of Baltimore County. The Civil War greatly reduced the patronage of his school and he suffered serious losses. Consequently in September, 1864, he accepted a call to a church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and he had prepared to move when Governor Bradford appointed him to public office.

The newly appointed State Superintendent proceeded at once to acquire such information as could be had concerning educational conditions in the counties.⁵ While he awaited returns from his letters of inquiry addressed to the county authorities the superintendent visited several northern States to study their school systems. The reports from the counties were not full and satisfactory. With few exceptions the school officials were unable to reply fully to his questions because they had never required formal reports from teachers and local officials. In the replies the Superintendent found "clear and unimpeachable evidence" that it was necessary "to begin about at the foundation and recast anew the educational edifice."

The State Superintendent submitted to the General Assembly a plan which he designed "to embrace a complete system of Public Instruction, beginning with the Primary School, progressing through the Grammar School to the County High School, in which young men [were] to be prepared for the State Colleges, whence they [should] pass to the Schools of Medicine or Law, or to the practical duties of active business.”⁶ To the system it was expected to add as the crowning feature the lectures of the Peabody Institute. It was a courageous ideal, which, if carried out, would by free tuition and scholarships open to every youth the way to the highest attainment of knowledge. It was proposed by the Superintendent to establish at one leap a thorough system of public education. There was no time for gradual development he thought; what had cost other States years of experiment he proposed to attain at one volition for Maryland. No partial system of gradual development, waiting for the decay of old prejudices or the abandonment of old ideas, could accomplish the duty which was at hand.

The fundamental principles of the system, according to the report, were (1) Education ought to be universal; (2) Education ought to be free; and therefore (3) The property of the whole state is responsible for such education of every child as will enable him to perform the duties of a man and a citizen.⁷ Free education, it was argued, was not a state charity, it was a duty of the State as the agent of the people to take care that the young were not defrauded of their rights.⁸ The report went so far as to urge compulsory attendance at school to make certain that the benefits of education would be enjoyed by the children.

The enthusiastic Superintendent put on paper a long bill “to establish a Uniform System of Public Instruction for the State of Maryland.” Along with the bill came a commentary which clearly explained its features. The bill contained the provisions of the common school system in the most advanced States in 1864, together with new features not yet included in State systems. In fact no State in the Union was at that time supporting a system of public education so elaborate as that devised by Superintendent Van Bokkelen.

The General Assembly in 1865 enacted a school law which in the main followed the State Superintendent's recommendations.⁹ This law, with only a few amendments, stood until the Constitution of 1867 put an end to the school system.

3. A SCHOOL SYSTEM ORGANIZED.

The State machinery, in accordance with the Constitution, consisted of a State Superintendent of Public Instruction, appointed by the governor, and of a State Board of Education of four members ex officio—the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, the Speaker of the House of Delegates, and the State Superintendent. In the Board and the State Superintendent was vested the supervision and control of public instruction. The Board had numerous important duties, which made it an important agency. The State Superintendent also had various administrative, judicial and supervisory functions, which made him an outstanding official in the State. The authority of these officials was extraordinarily large for that time.

No time was lost in getting the system under way. By an act of the General Assembly (1865) the office of the State Superintendent was located in the city of Baltimore and he was granted a contingent fund of $1,000.¹⁰ In his action the Superintendent proved to be determined and energetic. The State Board of Education within a few months appointed the county school officials, elected a principal of the normal school, adopted series of textbooks, and issued a detailed code of by-laws with rules for the government of schools and forms for the transaction of business.¹¹

Control of the schools in each county was under a Board of School Commissioners who were appointed by the State Board of Education. The numbers of these officials for the several counties were determined by the State Superintendent. The counties were divided into a sufficient number of school districts and each commissioner had special charge of a group of them which was known as a commissioner district. The commissioners appointed the teachers and generally controlled the schools in their respective districts. The county board had corporate power and held the title to the school property. It divided the county into districts and appointed a secretary-treasurer.

The president of the county board had "the general superintendence of all the schools of the county." In reality he was a county superintendent of schools. The men who held these positions received annual salaries, including their expenses, varying from $700 in Anne Arundel and Howard counties to $1200 in Baltimore, Frederick and Washington Counties.¹² In the larger counties these men devoted their whole time to the work. Six of these men had the degree of Doctor of Medicine and two others had the degree of Doctor of Divinity. These officials were selected after the State Board had conferred with prominent citizens of each county.¹³ Professional teachers were chosen "whenever practicable."¹⁴ The reports of these men to the State Superintendent show them to have been wide awake and capable officials who for the most part served in an effective manner.

In each school district the voters, according to the law, assembled annually to discuss questions relating to the schoolhouse and its equipment and to the improvement of the school. No real authority was, however, lodged in the districts.

It is clearly apparent that the control of the public school system was highly centralized. The State had its hands on the schools in no uncertain manner and its policies could easily be enforced. While the scheme was intended to insure a uniform system it obviously was extreme for a State in which the citizens were accustomed to highly localized control of schools. That it was an efficient means of organizing public education is hardly to be doubted.

4. FINANCIAL SUPPORT OF THE SCHOOLS.

The Constitution required the General Assembly to levy an annual tax of not less than 10 cents on each $100 of taxable property in the State for the support of free public schools which was to be distributed among the counties and the city of Baltimore in proportion to their respective population between the ages of five and twenty years. At the same time the General Assembly was prohibited from levying any additional school tax upon particular counties unless a county by popular vote expressed its desire for such a tax.

The Constitution also required the General Assembly to impose an annual tax of not less than five cents on every $100 of property in the State to raise a permanent State school fund of $6,000,000. This was an absurd requirement, to say the least. The General Assembly quickly recognized the folly of the provision and it very soon submitted to the voters the question of striking the permanent fund from the Constitution.¹⁵ The amendment was duly ratified by the voters and the fund was not raised.¹⁶

The school system was supported from several sources.^{16a} The General Assembly levied an annual State tax of 15 cents on each $100 of taxable property and ordered it to be distributed according to the Constitution. This tax constituted the major support of the schools. Certain fines, forfeitures and penalties were also allowed for public schools.

The Free School Fund was distributed to the counties and the city of Baltimore according to the earlier provisions for this fund. Funds which were invested and formed a part of the public school fund of any county were appropriated to the support of public schools in the county. The State donations to the academies were also continued until high schools should be established in the counties or cities in which aided academies were located.

^{16a} Laws, 1865, p. 298-301.

The law of 1865 made no mention of county taxes for schools except to repeal them after January 1, 1867. Apparently the county taxes were continued until that time. In 1867, however, the General Assembly authorized local taxes to pay for school-houses provided the voters in the districts affected gave their consent.¹⁷ In Baltimore and Allegany counties the voters in 1866 expressed a desire for additional taxes and the General Assembly accordingly authorized such taxes for them.¹⁸ A new general assessment, provided for in 1866, raised the assessment of property from $278,512,186 to $492,653,472¹⁹ which made county taxation for schools less necessary than it had been in 1866. The funds for the support of the public schools were therefore derived principally from the State (See Table I).

The State school tax was a commendable feature of the school system, but it was also one of the principal points of criticism. free schools. Under the arrangement for the levy and apportionment of the State tax the city of Baltimore and Carroll, Frederick and Washington counties paid to the State more than they received while six counties received from the State more than twice the amounts they paid (See Table II). The city of Baltimore during the two years contributed $157,767.33 more than it received in the apportionment. The doubtful feature of the apportionment was the use of the whole population between the ages of five and twenty years as the basis while the State tax went only to the support of schools for white children. Five of the six counties above referred to had many colored people in their population.

The state tax for schools was furiously assailed from some quarters.²⁰ At the same time the State Superintendent put up a clear and strong defense of the State tax and its apportionment on the ground that the free public school policy was a State policy and that it could not be accomplished unless the wealthy sections aided the poorer sections. The counties, he argued, had claims against the city of Baltimore because the great public works which had contributed to the prosperity and growth of that city had been constructed in part by money which had been levied upon the counties. Furthermore, he asserted, the wealth of the rural districts continued to swell the capital of the city and from increased intelligence in the counties the city would profit in wealth and in population.

5. ACADEMIES AND HIGH SCHOOLS.

Superintendent Van Bokkelen reported to the General Assembly in 1865 that many of the academies had ceased to exist and that others were "struggling on, doing the work of ordinary grammar schools and that very imperfectly."²¹ The State funds once appropriated to their support had frequently been divided and in five counties they had been entirely diverted to primary schools. Thus, with a few honorable exceptions no academies worthy of the name were founded. However, an interesting venture was under way in Cecil county where a law (1864) had transferred the academy donation of $800 to the Board of Commissioners of Public Schools and required the Board to establish three high schools.²² One high school had already been established at Elkton. It was along this line that he proposed to provide for secondary education which would prepare for admission to college.

The school law made mandatory for each county at least one high school for boys and girls.²³ Two counties might, however, unite their funds and establish a union high school for the youth of both counties. Support for these schools was to come from the annual State donations then made to academies and schools (usually $1200 for each county), from annual appropriations by the county board, and from such other donations as might be made from time to time. The academy donations were, however, to continue to the academies until a high school should be established in the county or city in which such academies were located.²⁴ The course of study and the mode of discipline were under the control of the State Board of Education and the State Superintendent or a professor of the Normal School was annually to visit and examine each high school. Military drill was made a part of the instruction.

The building of a system of secondary education did not prove an easy task and in the two years of the Van Bokkelen school system only three counties—Cecil, Talbot and Worcester—succeeded in getting high schools under way.²⁵ In Caroline county three “schools of a grade between Grammar and High” were established. In a number of cases the old academies were continued with State aid or the State donations went to the support of primary schools.

6. TEXTBOOKS.

“To secure harmony in the system of public instruction, and to enable children moving from one county to another to pursue their studies without interruption or unnecessary expense to parents or guardians, and also to prepare advanced pupils uniformly for the higher grades of instruction in high schools and colleges . . .” the law of 1865 required the use of uniform series of textbooks in all the public schools of the State.²⁶ The State Board of Education prescribed the books and the State

Superintendent purchased and distributed them to the counties as they were in need. The board of school commissioners in the county in turn made provisions for distributing the books to the pupils. In most of the counties the books were sold to the pupils, but in at least two counties they were furnished and a fee was charged for their use.²⁷ The cost of the books, according to the State superintendent, was, after the payment of all expenses of transportation to Baltimore and of distribution throughout the State, less than one-half of the usual retail price.²⁸

The management of this matter brought a considerable amount of criticism. The means employed for distributing the textbooks seem to have been satisfactory.²⁹ Question was raised, however, concerning the retail prices, which in numerous cases were more than double the cost, including freight and boxing, to the county school officials.³⁰ The handling of the textbooks was the cause of "some extraordinary remarks" about the State Superintendent and he stated that from no other source had the school officers "suffered more misrepresentation or unfair imputation."³¹ To the unhappy situation the agents of the books which had been rejected by the State contributed their share of talk. Nevertheless the State Superintendent expressed himself as content to know that his course had the approval of the State Board of Education and that the plan of distribution was satisfactory to the county boards. During the two years of the school system 252,135 textbooks were distributed.³²

7. THE TEACHERS AND THE SCHOOLS.

Several provisions of the school law related directly to the teachers. No one could legally be employed to teach in the public schools unless he had a certificate which was issued by the

State Superintendent or by the President of the Board of County School Commissioners.³³ The county certificates were of two grades and they were limited to three years. The salaries were determined by the county boards according to a plan set forth by the State Board of Education.³⁴ County teachers' institutes "designed as temporary normal schools" were mandatory and the attendance of teachers was required.³⁵

The schoolhouse situation in 1865 was deplorable. Schoolhouses, under the new law, had to be built according to uniform plans approved by the State Superintendent.³⁶ The State Board of Education prepared five sets of plans and specifications for schoolhouses and sent them to each county in order that the school commissioners might be guided in their work.³⁷ The expense of purchasing sites and erecting the buildings was at first a county obligation but, this arrangement proving inadequate to meet the emergency, the school districts were in 1867 authorized to levy by vote a property tax to pay for schoolhouses and counties which had school funds invested were authorized to appropriate them for schoolhouses.³⁸ The efforts for the improvement of schoolhouses resulted in material progress.

The law contained detailed provisions for schools.³⁹ A school had to be kept for at least six months each year in every school district and it was to be free to all white children over six and under nineteen years of age. Seven subjects were required by law and others were permitted. When a school enrolled more than sixty children it was to be divided so as to form a "graded" school and to have two teachers.

The school year was divided into four terms, as follows: (1)

Fall term, September 1 to November 15; (2) Winter term, November 16, to January 31; (3) Spring term, February 1 to April 15; (4) Summer term, April 16 to June 30. These divisions the law ordered to "to be strictly adhered to." Once each term the law required a public examination in each school, which parents and others who were interested, might attend. In addition to these requirements there were others which were made by the State Board of Education in its by-laws.

8. SCHOOLS FOR THE COLORED POPULATION.

In his plan for public education State Superintendent Van Bokkelen included provision for educating colored children in separate schools.⁴⁰ The General Assembly was not, however, prepared to go all the way with him on this point and it therefore contented itself with a requirement in the law that the taxes collected from colored people for school purposes were to be set aside to establish schools for colored children under such rules and regulations as the State Board of Education might prescribe.⁴¹ General taxation for the education of colored children was too radical to be accepted. Constantly the Superintendent urged the cause on the General Assembly but to no avail. The result was that no organized public plans were adopted for educating colored children in the counties.

In the meantime private benevolence began the work which the General Assembly shirked. Friends of the colored race organized in the city of Baltimore the Association for the Moral and Intellectual Improvement of Colored People, which proved to be the most active agent in the establishment of colored schools both in the city and in the counties.⁴² Before the close of 1867 it had organized 22 schools in the city and 62 schools in the counties, all of which enrolled 8,600 pupils.⁴³ These schools cost $61,808.50. In September, 1867, the schools in the city of Baltimore were adopted by the City Council and placed under the City School Commissioners. To train teachers for the colored schools the Association in 1866 established a normal school in the city of Baltimore.⁴⁴

9. THE SCHOOLS OF THE CITY OF BALTIMORE.

One problem which occasioned some ill feeling was the relation of the schools of the city of Baltimore to the State system. The city had a well organized system of schools under special legislation which dated from 1826.⁴⁵ Under the Constitution the School commissioners of the city were to remain as then constituted, subject to whatever changes the General Assembly and the city might make, and the city was to raise its local school tax as it had formerly done or as might be provided by the General Assembly and the city.⁴⁶ The city was, of course, to share in the annual distribution of the State school tax.

When the General Assembly enacted the school law of 1865 strong but unsuccessful efforts were made by members from Baltimore to except the city from the operation of the general law.⁴⁷ It seemed clear that the State was determined to hold the schools of the city in the "uniform system of public schools." The school authorities of Baltimore were, however, determined to run their own system and they flatly refused to be brought into the State system. They did not use the uniform series of textbooks until they were compelled to do so by a decision of the Court of Appeals,⁴⁸ they did not examine teachers and they charged tuition in the public schools, all of which were plain violations of the general law. The State Superintendent expressed his opinion that the city of Baltimore had no well defined educational system.⁴⁹ There was no adequate supervision and the expenditures, he suggested, did not secure the results expected.

Thus the State school officials and the city authorities were at loggerheads over the city schools and no satisfactory adjustment seems to have been made. On motion of a Baltimore delegate the House of Delegates in 1866 appointed a committee to visit the public schools of Baltimore and report on their condition. In its praise of the schools the committee was very enthusiastic.⁵⁰

10. THE STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

In his report to the General Assembly in 1865 Mr. Van Bokkelen included a plan for a State normal school which was adopted with practically no alteration.⁵¹ The law directed the State Board of Education to establish a State normal school in the city of Baltimore. The institution was to be supervised by the State Superintendent, who was by law the principal, ex officio. For carrying on the school the General Assembly made an annual appropriation of $7,000 and it also provided $2,000 to purchase furniture.

In 1865 the State Board of Education elected M. Alexander Newell principal.⁵² He at once visited teacher training institutions in other States and planned the school for Maryland. The Normal School, opened in January, 1866,⁵³ prospered from its beginning and the work proved acceptable. By the close of 1867 the Principal stated that 94 students were enrolled and he declared that no similar institution in the country had "achieved a similar success in so short a time."⁵⁴ The State Superintendent had much confidence in the Principal and when it was known that the State school system would be changed he trusted that Mr. Newell's "invaluable services" might long be retained in the position he "so ably and successfully" filled.⁵⁵

The city officials failed to provide a building and space was therefore rented.

11. HIGHER EDUCATION; THE MARYLAND INSTITUTE.

Superintendent Van Bokkelen's plan for a system of public education included a scheme for uniting the "State" colleges so as to make each an integral part of the University of Maryland.⁵⁶ This idea the General Assembly carried out only in part. Several institutions—St. John's College, Washington College, the Maryland Agricultural College, the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, and the Law School—were constituted the University of Maryland, but no provision was made for its management, and the University was therefore not organized under the proposed scheme.⁵⁷

The annual State donations to St. John's College, Washington College, and the Maryland Agricultural College in the form of scholarships were continued as was also the donation to the Baltimore Female College, the latter being increased.⁵⁸ Annual appropriations were also made to the Faculty of Arts and Sciences of the University of Maryland and the Law School, but these institutions failed to meet the conditions of the appropriations and therefore they did not receive State aid. A special appropriation of $45,000 was made to the Maryland Agricultural College in 1866 and the State became an equal joint owner of the property and the Board of Trustees was reduced to the four members of the State Board of Education and seven members elected by the stockholders.⁵⁹

Superintendent Van Bokkelen also recommended that the

12. EDUCATION OF SPECIAL TYPES OF CHILDREN.

Before the Civil War the State of Maryland began to give attention to the education of the blind, the deaf and the delinquent children and appropriations were made therefor, but no State institutions were established for this purpose. Superintendent Van Bokkelen did not overlook this educational need and his plan for public instruction was designed to embrace "an asylum for the blind, an asylum for the deaf and dumb, a school for idiotic and feeble-minded youth, and other benevolent and remedial institutions" such as houses of refuge and industrial homes.⁶² For such a forward step the General Assembly was not fully prepared and this feature of the Superintendent's plan was omitted from the school law.

The State, however, made some effort for the special types of children. For the education of the deaf and dumb the General Assembly voted funds annually and in 1867 it established a school for these children at Frederick.⁶³ Appropriations were made for the education of the indigent blind and funds were voted to assist in erecting the Maryland Institution for the Instruction of the Blind, a private school.⁶⁴ State aid was also given to the House of Refuge and several other private benevolent institutions.⁶⁵ The State Board of Education had no supervision over the institutions for special types of children.

13. EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Two associations were established to promote and foster the work of the school system. The first of these organizations was the Association of School Commissioners. In August, 1865, the State Board of Education called together this group of men to secure unity and energy of action and to impart the views of the Board on organizing and conducting schools under the new law.⁶⁶ At the second meeting, which was held at Annapolis in January, 1866, while the General Assembly was in special session, a permanent organization was effected. A third meeting was held in December, 1866, and a fourth occurred a year later.

This organization stood loyally behind the school system and after the demise of the system had been ordained by a new constitution the Association in a public statement declared that the character and condition of the schools had been greatly elevated by the uniform system.⁶⁷ It furthermore insisted that the leading features should be preserved in the new school organization that is, a State Board of Education, a State superintendent of public instruction, a uniform State tax for schools, a State normal school and teachers' institutes, uniform textbooks, boards of county school commissioners, and county superintendents.

The other organization which was formed was the State Teachers' Association. Its initiatory meeting was held in December, 1865, and the first regular meetings occurred seven months later (July, 1866), when a permanent organization was established.⁶⁸ The second regular meeting was held at Annapolis while the Constitutional Convention of 1867 was in session (July, 1867).⁶⁹ It was during this meeting that the Association drew up a memorial to the Convention which favored a State system of education, a general constitutional school tax, the continuation of the school system until the new system should be inaugurated, thorough supervision and the professional education of teachers. Its pronouncement was not as emphatic and definite as that which the school commissioners had made five months earlier.

14. EDUCATIONAL JOURNALS.

Two educational periodicals were published in Maryland before 1868. The Maryland School Journal, a monthly publication begun at Hagerstown in July, 1864, was intended to foster the common schools by impressing upon the minds of parents and teachers the truth that education is a debt due from present to future generations.⁷⁰ The Journal, being friendly to the new school law (1865), proposed to "wage a most uncompromising warfare" against the influential opponents of the uniform school system and the State Superintendent cordially recommended it to the teachers of Maryland.⁷¹ It seems to have come to an end with the October issue of 1865.

The second educational periodical was the Maryland Educational Journal, a monthly publication which began in 1867 and was published at Baltimore. Both the Association of School Commissioners and the State Superintendent were friendly to the enterprise. The Association, however, failed to support the Journal and soon the editor found himself at odds with the Superintendent.⁷² The venture fared badly and it came to an untimely end with the twelfth number (April, 1868).

15. SUCCESS AND CRITICISM OF THE SYSTEM.

Under the Constitution of 1864 there was established in Maryland a uniform system of free public schools and the emphasis was clearly on uniformity. The management was highly centralized and the system was prescribed in great detail. The scheme represented a wide swing from the county systems—and lack of system—which prevailed before 1865.

That the uniform system met with success cannot be denied. During the school year 1866-1867 more than 71,000 children attended 1,279 schools, and the sum of $436,205 was spent for schools in the counties, which was a cost of $8.74 for “each average pupil.”⁷³ Teachers were examined, a successful State normal school was gotten under way, several high schools were established, and other indications of success were evident.

Undoubtedly much of the credit for the system is due the State Superintendent. Mr. Van Bokkelen was a talented and capable official who thoroughly believed in public education and who worked zealously for its accomplishment. In his three reports made after the system was inaugurated there is abundant evidence of his vision and grasp of public education. But like many other reformers, he had no patience with the slow working of the public mind. He planned a thorough system of public education with a “comprehensive unity and uniformity” which, said a friend, constituted “its crowning excellence,”⁷⁴ but it seems to have been “too perfect to be suddenly introduced into a State so far behind-hand in such matters.”⁷⁵ The same friend, after he had become a critic, said of the Superintendent that he did “not appear to know such a word as expediency or anything akin to it,” and that “he, instead of endeavoring to conciliate the people, aimed at nothing but forcing the system into existence without regard . . . to the views of the people.”⁷⁶ The Superintendent’s great strength apparently proved a serious weakness in a difficult situation.

Several reasons were responsible for the opposition to the school system. First, there was politics in the situation. When the general provisions for the system were devised by the Constitutional Convention of 1864 the State was much divided politically and the minority was in control, which means that the Constitution did not represent the wishes of the majority. The uniform school system was thus inaugurated under peculiar circumstances. Under such conditions partisan opposition is to be anticipated and such there was in abundance.⁷⁷ One official said that opposition to the system "no matter from what source it springs, has its origin and foundation in prejudice, rather than sound reason or good sense."⁷⁸

Second, there was strong opposition to the form of State organization and supervision.⁷⁹ The administration was too far removed from the people, so it was said. It was certainly extreme for a State in which the schools had for years been almost entirely under county and district control. The absolute authority of the central board was strongly resented. In fact it was said that the system had become unpopular more because of the dictatorial powers of the State Board of Education than because of any lack in the faithful performance of its duties. The Board could by no means be charged with a lack of diligence in its work. It was also said that members of the Board—all of whom held high political positions—might use their position to advance partisan instead of educational interests. No clear evidence of such political maneuvers has, however, been found.

Third, the financial support was much criticized.⁸⁰ The expense, it was said, was too great. To this the State Superintendent replied that the cost was $6.14 per pupil and he stated that the statistics of no school system could "show so much work with equal economy and efficiency."⁸¹ Objection was also made to the method of State support whereby the wealthy parts of the State helped the poorer parts, as has been shown above.

Fourth, the provisions for the selection and the distribution of the uniform textbooks was denounced.⁸² It was said to foster a principle of speculation and the supposition was made that it "formed a very pretty little profit to somebody," though no clear evidence has been found to that effect.

Fifth, there was opposition to the county supervision. Vigilant and intelligent supervision by competent officials, paid for their work and responsible for its proper performance, the State Superintendent regarded as a chief feature of the school system.⁸³ Others, however, did not agree with him. One critic thought that supervision "in the sense of office-making" was an unnecessary expense and that the teacher of a public school, if he was competent, needed no more overseeing than the teacher of a private school.⁸⁴ All that was needed, it was argued, was a board of education and examination whose certificates of competent education should be sufficient for the life of any teacher to whom it was granted. Such duties "as riding over the whole county, and spending one-half hour in each school—or trying petty cases—seeing that each teacher (had) a republican form of government—or examining the children in some of their studies" was, he thought, as valueless as it was costly.

16. REACTION TO THE SCHOOL SYSTEM.

These criticisms, though in part unfounded and unreasonable, soon produced an unfavorable reaction. The General Assembly in 1867, in which control passed to the Conservative-Democrat party, discussed the school system freely.⁸⁵ As usual under such circumstances, some of the remarks were of a low order and made by members who lacked knowledge of the system. Some wanted to return to the old local systems and to reduce school expenditures. Only the determined opposition of the friends of the public schools saved the system. The presence at Annapolis of the committee appointed by the Association of School Commissioners was "very opportune." But the position of the school system was not altogether certain. The General Assembly in 1867 provided for a Convention to frame a new Constitution and form of government in case the voters consented.⁸⁶ On April 10, 1867, the voters consented and elected the delegates.⁸⁷ Then was to be the day of reckoning.

BALTIMORE COUNTY LAND RECORDS OF 1670.

Contributed by LOUIS DOW SCISCO.

Baltimore County still includes both sides of the upper Bay in 1670. There is no established county seat as yet, but the land transfers indicate that the Gunpowder River district is emerging as the chief locality of the county. It is noticeable also that land buyers are taking up tracts at the heads of the inlets. At these locations they reach proximity to the overland trails that cross the streams at fordable points. It is an advance in local development when local transportation begins to shift from the canoe to the pack horse. The "horse path" mentioned in a Mosquito Creek deed is probably an early trail. Notice of Richard Collins, the smith, is significant because the independant smithy is usually the first industrial unit to appear in a frontier community. Neither physicians nor clergymen as yet appear in the land papers as residents. Earlier papers have mentioned a merchant at Sassafra River. One is now mentioned as at Gunpowder River.

The items immediately following summarize the record material on pages 77 to 93 of court house liber I. R. No. P. P., to which they have been transcribed at some past time from book H. W. No. A. B., now lost.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SOCIETY.*

March 9th, 1931.—The regular meeting of the Society was held to-night with the President in the chair.

Mr. Louis H. Dielman presented on behalf of Mrs. Katherine Mackenzie Brevitt a collection of old deeds and indentures dated about 1687. Mrs. Brevitt presented also a number of old newspapers and books.

The Society was advised of the purchase of a letter of Maxilium Godefroy, dated Baltimore, August 13, 1819.

It was stated that the wonderful collection of sheet music, now in possession of the Society, made it possible for us to lend to St. John's College two original pieces of music composed especially for the reception to Lafayette, held at St. John's about 1824. These pieces are to be used for the Lafayette celebration to be held at the College.

It was reported that a sword and the original letter of presentation, presented to John O'Neill of Havre de Grace for his valor by citizens of Philadelphia in 1813, had been presented to this Society by the great grandson of John O'Neill.

The following persons were elected to membership:

Mrs. George Tyler Smith

Col. John D. Long

Mr. Watson E. Sherwood

Mr. W. Allan Rhode

John P. Pace, Jr., Esquire

Mr. Stirling Graham

Vice-President Thom presented the following resolution, which was duly seconded and unanimously carried:

WHEREAS: The Maryland Historical Society possesses some two hundred thousand historical papers which among the similar collections of the forty-eight States of our country are unexcelled, but are uncatalogued, uncalandered and, therefore, unavailable; and,

* Inadvertently omitted from June number of Magazine.

WHEREAS: All such buried treasures should be brought into usefulness; and,

WHEREAS: The National Society of the Daughters of the Founders and Patriots of America have undertaken to restore physically our papers at a cost of $300. or more, not to exceed $400., our valuable Robert Gilmore papers and so make them useful; and

WHEREAS: Such generous service is not only cordial and helpful in itself, but, also, and most importantly, tends to encourage similar public service on the part of other such Associations;

Be It Resolved: That The Maryland Historical Society in regular session on this ninth day of March, nineteen hundred and thirty-one, takes keen pleasure in now recording the gratitude it feels for this bounteous coöperation and directs that a copy of this resolution bearing the seal of the Society be promptly forwarded by our Recording Secretary to The National Society of Daughters of the Founders and Patriots of America.

The following deaths were reported from among our members:

Dr. Samuel T. Earle, February 19, 1931.

Mr. John P. Horsey, February 22, 1931.

Mr. John O'Neill, February 27, 1931.

Mr. Henry C. Shirley, March 1, 1931.

Mr. J. Clinton Watts, March 1, 1931.

Dr. David Allan Robertson, President of Goucher College, gave a very interesting talk on "Some Notes on Higher Education in Maryland."

A unanimous vote of thanks was extended to Dr. Robertson.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

James Rumsey, Pioneer of Steam Navigation. By Ella May Turner. Scottsdale, Pa. Mennonite Publishing House, 1930.

Toward the end of the eighteenth century a war of pamphlets was waged between James Rumsey and John Fitch in the matter of the invention of the steamboat, which controversy has been kept alive to the present day. In Miss Turner's monograph on Rumsey, which presents many of the documents in the case, the argument seems to be settled in favor of Rumsey as the originator of the idea of steam navigation. In the brief foreword to the volume the author gives due credit to Fitch and Fulton for their part in the development of this idea. The story of Rumsey's life, with its succession of trials and discouragements, its partial success and his untimely death when success seemed assured, is interestingly told and is supported by numerous documents not heretofore presented. The book is well illustrated and has an index. It has been reviewed at length in "The Saturday Review of Literature," for August 29, 1931. We quote a part of the concluding paragraph: "... But James Rumsey, who conceived the idea of the propulsion of boats by means of steam, before either Fitch or Fulton, who made trials of his steamboat before Fitch and Voight had completed models of a steam engine, and who first demonstrated to the public the practicability of steam navigation, has apparently been forgotten by his native State and by his country, for Maryland has erected no memorial to her distinguished son, and the United States has made no public recognition of the debt that she owes Rumsey for his 'high agency in giving to the world the benefits of the steamboat,' and in the churchyard of St. Margaret's, far from his homeland, far from everything that he once held dear, James Rumsey, pioneer in steam navigation, sleeps in an unmarked grave."

“MOUNT ROYAL” AND ITS OWNERS.

By ELLA K. BARNARD.

It is a trite but true saying that the roots of the present extend far into the past—one of these we have traced back into old England almost to the very beginning of Quakerism—when in 1654, Christopher Birkhead, a worthy merchant of Bristol, became a follower of George Fox, convinced of the truth of “The Inner Light” and felt called on to “testify” and teach the people not only in England but in France and Holland [See “Besse,” “Sewell” and “Gough” for quotations, volume and page], for which he and his family suffered much persecution until they finally sailed (1661), traditions say, in their own ship for Maryland where he took up land in Anne Arundel County.

Of him little further is known—but Christopher Birkhead of the fifth generation, his descendant, was a judge in Talbot County and also a Colonel in the Revolutionary Army, having left the Friends before this time.

A passing glance in the old records of Easton Meeting (Talbot Co.), gives the names of Abraham Birkhead, Ann Birkhead, Christopher Birkhead and Solloman Birkhead, as serving on various committees of the meeting.

Dr. Solomon Birkhead (son of Christopher), of the sixth generation (1761-1836), of Baltimore, married (1786), Jane McCulloh. As a physician he had a large practice and lived nearly opposite the Battle Monument in Baltimore. He came into possession of and bought large tracts of land which he farmed. On one of these tracts was a small house and a mill.

What is now North Avenue was formerly a deep ravine, down which in the memory of oldest citizens a good sized stream was flowing. Some years ago when the sewer was laid there forty feet under ground stumps of good sized trees were found. Possibly the old mill was located here.

Beyond the farmed land were wooded heights and an alluring hill top on which Dr. Birkhead built (probably 1792), or about the time of his marriage, a summer residence and named it with surrounding grounds "Mount Royal," and probably made it later his permanent home. [His name not in Baltimore Directory, 1802.]

One tract bought by Dr. Birkhead was said to be from the estate of his contemporary townsman, Charles Carroll of Carrollton (1737-1832), who died just 4 years before him, so it is not possible that any part of the Carroll estate is a part of the present Mt. Royal.

The house was of stone, built in the square Georgian Colonial style, two stories and a half with old style Gothic dormer windows in the roof and some back buildings.

On the first floor were two large rooms, on either side of a wide hall with winding stairway.

At his death (1836) Dr. Birkhead willed Mt. Royal with surrounding lands to his daughter Christiana who had married (1807) Dr. Thomas Emerson Bond, Sr. and was then living in New York. (Christiana died 1858.)

Dr. Bond too came of an old Quaker family, being fifth in descent from Peter Bond "Immigrant," and Alice his wife, who came in that early wave of Quaker emigration in 1660 to Maryland and who settled in Anne Arundel County. [On Lesser Bond's Forest, later included in Baltimore Co.].

His son Thomas became a large landowner and his "Bond's Forest" included many tracts with the quaint old names then common and his "Forest" included parts of both Harford and Baltimore counties.

Thomas Bond was a member of Gunpowder Monthly Meeting and a record states—“ 8th mo. 22, 1749 ” Thomas Bond, Sr., gave 1 acre of land to his sons Thomas and John for the use of Friends forever “ and on it later Little Falls or Fallston Meeting house was built. A later record states that in “ 1753 Thomas Bond, Sr., Thomas Bond, Jr., John Bond, and others, were appointed by the meeting to see to the proper surveying of the land.” This land the record states was part of “ Bond’s Forest.” Again in 1773 an additional acre of land was given.

These families remained strict Friends. John later called “ Gentleman John ” of Fell’s Point, etc., and Dr. Bond in his recent work on the family gives interesting anecdotes of him. His purchase of the slave “ King Ben ” from a slave vessel at Joppa, his being “ dealt with ” by the meeting, his “ Blazoned coach,” his various business ventures, etc.

Soon after the death of Dr. Solomon Birekhead (1836), in a fire at “ Mount Royal,” much of the interior of the house was burned but it was later rebuilt in the old walls.

After the death of Christiana B. Bond (1858), Judge Hugh Lennox Bond chose “ Mt. Royal ” and surrounding land as his share of the estate that was divided among her ten children, and later Hugh Lennox Bond, Jr., inherited the property and lived there the latter part of his life.

During these two generations many changes were made but outwardly the old building remained the same—excepting that a new portico—designed by Hugh L. Bond, Jr.—with fluted Doric columns and paneled roof replaced the older one and a tiled terrace extended along the entire front of the house. The two old Gothic dormers in the roof were replaced with three more modern ones of greater width, with flat roof covering each of the three opening windows on a level with those of the other stories—admitting much more light and sunshine into these sleeping rooms. “ Judge Bond improved the library part and made some other alterations.” To him then is owing the handsome mahogany woodwork, the solid doors and mantel and the bookcases surrounding the room with mullioned doors and over all the heavy cornice ornamented with Wall of Troy and Egg and Dart mouldings.

The parlor is finished in white with the heavy cornice and Greek mouldings—the mantel handsomely fluted with central panel on which two griffins guard the altar fire—presumably the home fires: These fires are literally well provided for in the ample fireplaces that Dr. Birkhead thoughtfully provided in every room of the old house, to furnish cheer and brightness and possibly even warmth in those earlier days.

The new or shingled addition added much to the size and interior elegance of “Mt. Royal” but detracted from the weathered beauty of the old walls.

Leaded glass doors open from the parlor into the “Den,” a large room, one entire end of which is a handsome bay with seven leaded glass windows, opening over a comfortable surrounding seat. In the large dining room, from which the conservatory opens, the ceiling is beautifully decorated with a moulded wreath of fruit and flowers.

Scarce two acres of the old lawns and gardens remain terraced and hedged, so that in summer time, one scarce knows that the city presses close about it. A driveway leads to the dwelling and again to the street below, or a flight of 32 steps for those who love to climb.

Formerly the terraces ran one after the other down the hill-sides to Jones Falls, the Northern Central tracks and with Southern boundary the present North Avenue. The terraces were laid out by the same man who laid out the terraces at Hampton on the Ridgley estate near the same time.

In the grounds a few veteran trees that bear many scars of the surgeon’s knife remain and many of younger growth—trees that the birds love—trees for the squirrels—many shrubs—beautiful flowering crab-trees and magnolias—so many magnolias!

Hugh Lennox Bond was a great lover of wild flowers and caused many loads of woods earth to be brought to encourage their growth, some were imported, some gathered in family excursions, and today they are blooming in many nooks and corners. In earliest spring time come snow drops and snow flakes, scilla, aconite and chinodoxia and many more, each in season to make glad the hearts of the present owners.

“ Mount Royal ” however, no longer bears the old historic name—it is right that it should be known by the name of the friends who made its ownership possible for us—it is now The Taylor, but one must ever regret that such change was necessary.

At the death of Hugh Lennox Bond, “ Mount Royal ” came into possession of the Friends of Baltimore Meeting, Park Avenue.

I am indebted to Miss Christiana B. Bond, to Professor J. Russel Hayes of Swarthmore College, and Mr. S. W. Shaw, for assistance kindly given.

HARRISON NOTE.

BURR HARRISON, I., the Immigrant to Virginia, was born in London, England, Dec. 28, 1636 and was baptized in St. Margaret's, Westminster, Jan. 3, 1636/7.² He came to Virginia before 1660 and settled in that part of Stafford County which later became Prince William County. Henning's Statutes states that "In 1670 Burr Harrison was chosen one of His Majesty's Honourable Justices of the Peace." He was also appointed by the Governor of Virginia to be one of the ambassadors to the Emperor of the Piscataways. In the Virginia Calendar of State Papers are many references to him and his offices. He seems to have died in 1706. According to family records he married Frances Burdette of Maryland and had several children. A grant of land in 1698 shows that he also married the widow of William Mansbridge who died in Stafford Co., in 1697. Burr Harrison, I., had

- II. Burdette.
- III. Burr, who died in 1722; he married Mrs. Lettice Smith, nee Green.
- IV. Thomas (1665-1746), who married Sythia Elizabeth Short, of Maryland.
- V. William, who died Dec. 1, 1745; he married Sarah Hawley who survived him and married, secondly, Thomas Lewis (d. 1749).
- VI. Frances Anne.
- VII. Sarah Burdette.
- VIII. Sybil, who married Thomas Whitledge.
- IX. Mary.

THOMAS HARRISON, son of Burr Harrison, I., and his wife Frances Burdette, was born Aug. 7, 1665 and died Aug. 13, 1746; he married Sythia Elizabeth Short. Thomas Harrison patented tracts of land in four counties. He and his brother William, had large grants. Later he and another brother, Burdette, received grants. Capt. Thomas Harrison, as he was known, John West and Simon Pearson patented land together. In 1706 they received a grant of 4,639 acres. His estate on the Chappawamsic River was named for this river. He was vestryman, crown justice, captain of the militia and a member of the House of Burgesses from 1741 until his death in 1746.

Northern Neck Land Book No. 2, page 305. Land Office, Richmond. Feb. 12. 1698. "William Mansbridge of Stafford County died in 1697 seized of 200 acres of land in Quanticott Creek in the said county, leaving no heirs but his wife, Mary, with whom Burr Harrison hath intermarried." Mansbridge's deed was dated March 4, 1695/6, being for the uppermost part of a Patent of Thomas Dayes for 500 acres, of which the said Mansbridge, Matt Martyn and Thomas Burton did purchase 200 acres March 4, 1695/6. (Deed Book 1738-1741, Prince William Co., Va., Feb. 20, 1738. Between Thomas Calvert alias Harrison and Sarah, his wife, of the said county, and John Carr. Sell to the said Carr 200 acres on the north side of Quanticott Creek, it being the land that Burr Harrison left between George Calvert alias Harrison, Burr Calvert alias Harrison, and Thomas Calvert alias Harrison.)³

In 1700 Burr Harrison had married "the widow of Edward Smith and as she is now dead" he asked to be appointed guardian to Smith's children. In 1702 there was a deed from Burr Harrison as guardian of William, Edward and Katherine Smith, children of Edward Smith and Lettice, his wife, and grandchildren of Anne Scarlett of Stafford County. (Virginia Magazine of History & Biography, vol. 23, p. 315.) (Whether this was Burr Harrison I, or his son, Burr Harrison II, does not appear, but it is probably the latter as it would seem improbable that Burr Harrison I, had three wives in so short a period of time.—Compiler.)

³ One might wonder if these 200 acres were the same 200 acres of land, and if this was the same Burr Harrison, of the patent of Feb. 12, 1698!

James Neale, Jr., their son, died in 1727; he married twice: firstly, in 1681, Elizabeth Calvert, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Stone) Calvert; and, secondly, in 1687, Elizabeth (1666-1734), daughter of Capt. James Neale (1615-1684) was Lord of Wollaston Manor, in Maryland. He was very prominent in the early days of the Colony. His daughter, Henrietta Maria Neale, who was a God-daughter of Her Majesty, Henrietta Maria of France, wife of Charles I,

King of England, married twice: firstly, Richard Bennett, Jr.; and, secondly, Colonel Philemon Lloyd, both prominent Marylanders of Colonial Days.

Landon Calvert (1764-1809) was a descendant of Gov. Leonard Calvert (1606-1647), Lord of Trinity, St. Gabriel's and St. Michael's Manors, and of Gov. William Stone (1603-1660), Lord of Poynton Manor. Michael Taney, the Immigrant, came to Maryland in 1660 and was High Sheriff of Calvert County from 1685 to 1689; he died in 1692. His first wife, Mary Taney, was living in 1685; he married, secondly, Jane Trueman, daughter of Henry Trueman. Michael Taney, son of the preceding, died in 1703; he married Dorothy Brooke,⁴ daughter of Roger and Dorothy (Neale) Brooke and granddaughter of James and Anne (Gill) Neale. Michael Taney III, son of the preceding, died in 1743; he married his cousin, Mary Neale, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Lord) Neale (q. v.). In 1687 (Liber IX, page 476, Land Office, Annapolis, Md.) the account of Thomas Banks shows that Michael Taney was the "husband of Margaret Beckwith," daughter of George Beckwith, deceased. Just which Michael Taney this was does not appear. Liber Xa, page 3, shows that Michael Taney died on May 22, 1692. This was, of course, the Immigrant, and Margaret Beckwith must have been one of his wives or a wife of his son, Michael Taney, II.

¹¹ Evidently Richard Kirkland Calvert (Compiler).

¹² These two Thomas R. Calverts seem to have had almost identical records, so they were probably the same person. The first Richard Calvert was listed as 45 years of age and upwards, while the second Richard was listed as being between 26 and 45 years of age.

NOTE: The foregoing Census records have been furnished the Compiler by Mrs. Ella Foy O'Gorman of Washington, D. C. Acknowledgement is hereby made to her.

By request the Compiler states that all descendants of Gov. Leonard Calvert (1606-1647), through his great-grandson, George Calvert (1700-1771), are eligible to the following societies: Lords of Colonial Manors, Descendants of Colonial Governors, Colonial Wars, Colonial Dames, Sons and Daughters of the Pilgrims, Orders of Founders of America, etc. The description of the Calvert coat-of-arms is Quarterly, first and fourth, paley of six, or and sable, a bend counterchanged; second and third, quarterly, argent and gules, a cross flory counterchanged. Crest: out of a ducal coronet or, two pennons, the dexter of the first and the other sable, staves gules. Motto: Fatti maschi, Parole femine. (Deeds for men, words for women).

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Compiler wishes to thank all those members of the Calvert Family who have, in any way, assisted him in gathering data of this distinguished family, and especially the following: Mrs. Ella Foy O'Gorman, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. William Mumford Fairley, of Raeford, N. C.; Mrs. John W. Alderson, of Forrest City, Ark.; Mrs. G. W. Davis, of Flemingsburg, Ky., and Mrs. John E. Harris, of El Dorado, Ark. It is always a matter of regret that there are so often members of this family, as in all others, who have no interest in the history of their forebears and who, as a result, ignore letters written to them or refuse their co-operation. Had all members of the Calvert Family (whom he requested for family data) complied with the Compiler's request, this sketch would have been more complete. However, he sends this forth, to join his other sketches of the Calverts, as a pioneer, with the hope that all interested descendants will send in their correct lines to him and also assist him in correcting the data already published so that at some future date he may be able to publish a book on the Calvert Family of Maryland and Virginia, descendants of the first Lord Baltimore, Sir George Calvert (1579-1632), through his second son, the Honorable Leonard Calvert (1606-1647), first governor of the Colony of Maryland and brother of Cecil Calvert (better known by the Latinized form of his name, Cecilius), second Lord Baltimore and first Proprietor of the Maryland Colony, the eldest son and heir of the first Lord Baltimore. The address of the Compiler is: 516 Poplar Street, Chattanooga, Tennessee. He will be glad to hear from any descendants who are interested in the history of their family, but he is not at all interested in the so-called Calvert Estate, the myth that has lured some descendants hitherto.

Recent investigations of Mrs. Ella Foy O'Gorman show that there is proof of only three children of the Immigrant, Burr Harrison, viz: Thomas, William and Sybil, who married Thomas Whitledge. It is probable that Burr Harrison who married Mrs. Lettice Smith, was also a son, but of Cuthbert, Burdette, Frances Anne, Sarah Burdette and Mary, there is no proof whatever! Also there is no proof that the Immigrant married Frances Burdette. FAMILIES OF CHURCHILL, CROKER, FOX, COPLE-
STONE, BONVILE, ELLICOTT, ETC., OF DEVON-SHIRE, ENGLAND, AND SOME OF THEIR DESCENDANTS IN AMERICA:

THE ELLICOTTS OF BUCKS COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA, AND MARYLAND, EVANS OF BUFFALO, N. Y., CHAMPLINE OF WHEELING, CURTIS OF MOUNDSVILLE, FISHER AND FOX OF PHILADELPHIA.

Compiled by WILLIAM M. ELLICOTT.

Gitto de Lion, a noble of Normandy, living A. D. 1055, had issue two sons, Richard de Lion, Lord of Montalban, and Wandril de Lion, Lord of Courcil, from whom is descended the family of Churchill.

He married Isabel de Tuya, and by her had Roger de Courcil and Rowland (ancestor of the Courcils of Picton).

“Roger de Courcil, being of those who accompanied William, Duke of Normandy, in his invasion of this realm, A. D. 1066, had, in reward of his services, divers lands in Somersetshire, Dorsetshire and Devonshire (as appears by Domesday Book), among which was the Lordship of Churchill, in the County of Somerset, the place of his abode and from which he took his surname, being written in the old records Curichil, Cheuchill, Chirchil, etc.”

He married Gertrude, daughter of Sir Guy de Torbay, and by her had—John de Chirchil, who married Joan de Kilrington, and by her had Sir Bartholomew de Chirchil who held the castle of Bristol for King Stephen.

He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Ralph FitzRalph, Lord of Tiverton, Devon, and had Pagan de Cherchill, who also left a son—Roger de Cherchill, living in the time of Edward I. His Son was Elias de Cherchelle. He married Dorothy, daughter of the ancient family of the Columbers, and by her had three sons; viz:

MANOR HOUSE OF THE LINEHAM ESTATE NEAR PLYMOUTH, DEVONSHIRE, BUILT BY COURTNAY
CROKER, ESQ^R, EARLY IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

(1) John Churchill, married Joan Dwaney, leaving Margaret, and Agnes married to Thomas Gifford upon whom the Lordship of Churchill and other lands devolved.

(2) Giles Churchill, who held the lordship of Yealmpton and Lineham, Co., Devon, and had one daughter Agnes Churchill, who married Sir John Croker (of Crokeren Hele) and carried these estates to his family.

(3) William Churchill, from whom the family of the Dukes of Marlborough spring through eight generations to Sir Winston Churchill, born 1620.

(Taken from Collins Peerage, edition of 1810.)

The family of Croker, or Crocker, was one of the most ancient in Devonshire, being undoubtedly one of the old Saxon families. Prince, in his Worthies of Devon remarks, "There is a tradition in this county of three eminent families, that they were settled here before the Conquest, according to the old saw often used in discourse,—

"Crockers, Crewys and Coplestone,
When the Conquerer came, were at home."

He also says that in his time, the heir of this family, Courtney Croker of Lineham, who died 1740, had told him, "that, when travelling in Saxony, he met some gentlemen of his name, and that they gave the same coat of arms as he doth, a plain argument that originally they came out of that country" This, however, is a trifle naïf, in view of the fact that the first recorded ancestor, William Croker, dwelt at Crokeren Hele in 1308 and this place-name, together with Crokeren Tor on Dartmore and Crokeren well near Credition, would seem to carry them back to the period of the drift of the Saxons into Devonshire as early as the 7th, or 8th century, long before there were any arms in use anywhere in Europe.

However, we find that, after three hundred and forty years, the male line of Churchill of Lineham became extinct and that Sir John Croker, of Hele, married the heiress, Agnes, daughter of Giles Churchill, and thereafter resided at Lineham, a place of nearly three thousand acres which is occupied now by the descendants of James Bulteel, of Flete, who married, Mary, the heiress of Courtnay Croker Esq'r in the first half of the 18th century. It is occupied today by Mrs. W. E. P. Bastard and her daughters, the Misses Bulteel, the twenty-sixth generation of the blood living on the place, descended also from the Earls Grey.

The present house of which we show a photograph, is designed in the Georgian style, having been built by Courtnay Croker, but it stands on the cellar and foundations of an earlier house in the Tudor style, while there are dependencies which are clearly in the style of Queen Ann.

Among the attractions of Lineham are: several hundred acres of well stocked game preserves, three miles of trout fishing in the Yealm river, a lesser trout stream, hunting with the Dartmoor Hounds which are kept at Ivy Bridge, with the Modbury Harriers and with the Otter Hounds.

To return to William Croker of Crokern Hele (OE for Hold or Stronghold): his son, William, of Hele, tempus Edward III, had a son, Sir John Croker who married Agnes Churchill. Their son, Sir John Croker of Lineham, c. 1396, married the heiress of Corim, who brought him the estate of Hamerdon.

Their son, Sir John Croker, of Lineham and Hemerdon, married the heiress of Dawnay. He distinguished himself for his bravery at the battle of Agincourt under King Henry V. Their son was Sir John Croker of Lineham, and Yealmpton died May 8th, 1508, married to Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Yeo, of Heaton Sackville. The illustration here shown is taken from the Brass which is in the church at Yealmpton and was formerly attached to his tomb, since destroyed. He was cup-bearer and standard bearer to Edward IV, and accompanied him into France and was honored by King Louis XI.

Prince, in his Worthies of Devonshire, says: "As to Sir John Croker, what brought him first into favor at Court, whether courage and skill at arms, or readiness of address, or what else, I do not find, but he became so gracious with king Edward IV, that he was admitted a sworn servant in the honourable office of Cupbearer, who, "in remuneratione servitii" gave him a cup d'or, having in the centre a rose p. p. r. for the crest unto his coat armour, and, moreover bestowed upon him the honour of knighthood. The crest was further augmented in 1475, by Louis XI, of France, with three fleurs de lys."

BRASS IN YEALMPTON CHURCH NEAR LINEHAM. EFFIGY OF

"The tomb of Sir John Croker, with his effigy in brass, is in the parish church of Yealmpton—a few miles from Plymouth—with the following inscription: "Hic Jacet Johannes Crokker, miles, quondam Ciphoramis ac Signifer illustrissime regis, Edwardi Quarti, qui obit Maii Viii, anno Domini, Millissimo quinquagesimo octavo."

In 1497 he went to the defense of the city of Exeter against Perkin Warbeck, the imposter, represented to be the son of Edward IV, murdered in the Tower by order of Richard, Duke of Gloucester some years before.

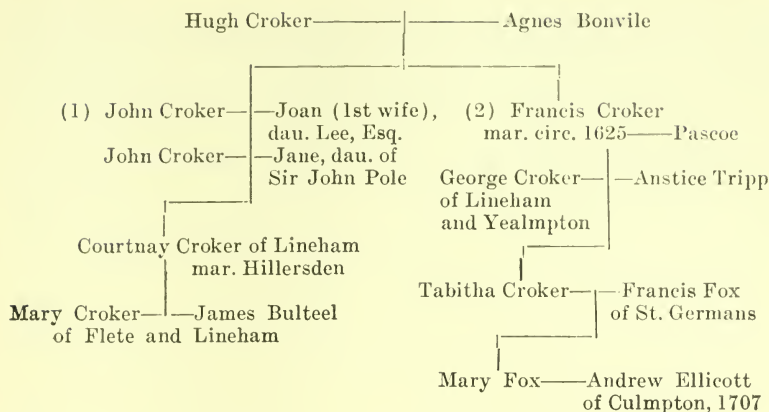

Then came Sir John Croker of Lineham, son of the above and Elizabeth Yeo. He was the High Sheriff of the County, tempus, Henry VIII, and married to Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Lewis Pollard of Roborow, Devon; whose son was John Croker, married to Elizabeth Strode, daughter of Richard Strode of Newnham, Devon; whose son, John Croker of Lineham, married Agnes, daughter and co-heiress of John Servington, of Tavistock.

Their eldest son, Hugh Croker of Lineham, circa 1580, married Agnes, daughter and co-heiress of John Bonville, of Ivy Bridge, descended from Sir Nicholas Bonville, of Wiscombe, Devonshire, and his son Sir William, who by his wife Joan, had issued Nicholas, who married Matilda, daughter and co-heir of Sir Thomas Pine, of Shute; of the same family as Sir Adrian du Pin, one of the knights of the Round Table of king Arthur's foundation, of the year of our Lord, 520,—says Prince; a persistent tradition in Devonshire.

Shute is a great estate near Axminster, about which there is much romance. It has given many knights to the crusades and to the wars of England. The gateway, with three towers and of two stories, and the ancient manor house, are in the Tudor style, while the house occupied by the de la Pole family, who now own it, is a large one farther within the park, in the Georgian style. The Bonviles settled at Wiscombe, reign Henry III and paid a rent of 22 Shillings to the Abbots of St. Michels in Normandy. Sir William Bonville of Shute married Alice . . . and had issue John Bonville married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Fitz Roger, whose son William Bonville of Chewton (born at Shute) was knighted before 1447 while with the army in France. He was sheriff of Devon, 1443 and Seneschal of Aquitaine, 1442, 1448. He was summoned to Parliament as Willelmo Bonville, Domine Bonville de Chewton.

King Henry VI, was taken prisoner at the battle of Northampton, 1460, and was put in the custody of Lord Bonville; but at the second battle of St. Albans, 1461, the Lancastrians were victorious and he was taken and beheaded. His son and grandson had been killed at the battle of Wakefield, and his great grand-daughter, Cicely, became his heiress. She married Sir Thomas Grey, created Marques of Dorset, whose mother was Elizabeth Woodville, whose first husband, Sir John Grey, was killed at St. Albans and she afterwards became the queen of Edward IV. However, William, Lord Bonville, had by Elizabeth Kirkby, a natural son, John Bonville, on whom he had settled the estate of Ivy Bridge near Yealmpton; whose name, after four generations, expired in a daughter and heiress, married to Hugh Croker of Lineham. (Prince's Worthies of Devon).

The descent from Hugh Croker and Agnes Bonville is as follows:

STRODE—FORTESCUE.

John Strode, of Strode, by his wife, Jane, daughter of Burleigh, of Clenacomb, had issue, Richard who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Fortescue, of Wood, and it was their descendant who married John Croker, son of Sir John Croker, tempus Henry VIII.

This family and the Earls of Fortescue are descended from Sir John Fortescue, Captain of Meaux, a famous soldier under king Henry V; and from Sir Richard le Forte, who, after the battle of Hastings, was called Fort Escu, because in the battle, he had defended the Conqueror with his strong shield.

POLLARD—COPELSTONE.

Walter Pollard of Horwood lived in the time of Henry III and after several generations, to John Pollard who married Eleanor, daughter of John Coplestone of Coplestone—whose son Robert had a son Lewis, 1465-1540, whose daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Croker of Lineham. Of the Coplestones Prince says, "When this family first grew into eminence I do not find. It was eclipsed as most of the Saxon families were, a long while by the interposition of the Norman Conqueror." They appear in the reign of King Edward II in which William de Coplestone and Richard Coplestone are set down as witnesses to a deed. Which Richard had issue Adam, who had issue John, who, by his wife, daughter of John Graas, of Ting Graas, had issue, John Coplestone, of Coplestone, who by Elizabeth his wife, had a daughter, Eleanor, married to John Pollard, Esq'r of Horwood. "They were wont to be styled Coplestone, the "White Spur." This office was made by creation of the King, the ceremony whereof was thus: What gentleman the king was pleased to bestow this honor upon, he was wont to put about his neck a silver collar of SSSS—and to confer upon him a pair of silver spurs. Whereupon, in the west part of the kingdom, they were called the White Spurs, by which they were distinguished from knights, who were wont to wear guilt spurs, the title being hereditary and belonging to the heir male of the family.

FOX OF ST. GERMANS.

Burke, in his History of the Commoners states, that "the numerous families of Fox at present residing in the west of England sprang from one common ancestor, a Francis Fox, who married, in 1646, Dorothy Kekewich. Tradition represents him to have come from Wiltshire, from the parish of Farley, or that of Pitton, somewhere in 1645, during the commotions of the Civil War, and he is stated to have been descended from the same family as the celebrated Sir Stephen Fox, ancestor of the Earls of Ilchester and Lords Holland. Dorothy Kekewich was of a noted family of Exeter, whose house at Catchfrench near Liskeard, became their residence on first settling in Cornwall." At the present moment, the head of the family is Sir Trehawke Kekewich, Baronet and in Exeter Cathedral there is a monument to General Robert George Kekewich, Defender of Kimberly and leader of the Devon troops in the Boer War. The family seat is at Peamore, four miles from Exeter.

The son of Francis Fox and Dorothy Kekewich was Francis Fox (2) who married Tabitha Croker, daughter of George Croker of Lineham, Esq'r. and whose daughter was Mary Fox who married Andrew Ellicott of Culmpton, 1707. The family of Fox have been distinguished for their scientific and humanitarian activities. Some of them shared in the sufferings of Friends, who were persecuted over a considerable period. One member of the family, Mr. Joseph Fox, surgeon, of Plymouth, in 1778, having a third interest in two vessels at the time war broke out between France and England, disapproved strongly of his partners determination to arm them as privateers to prey on French commerce. Nor would he sell his interest to his partners. As privateers the ships were very successful and Mr. Fox, having exacted his share, made a protracted search for all the French owners who had suffered through the activities of the vessels, and paid each one his share of the losses, so far as they could be ascertained.

Another member of the family of Fox discovered kaolin in Cornwall, the basis of a flourishing industry in the manufacture of porcelain. Robert Were Fox, on the occasion of a visit to his cousins in the United States in 1794, was introduced to President Washington by Andrew Ellicott, and was appointed United States Consul at Falmouth, Cornwall, which office was held after him by his son and grandson.

Mr. Barclay Fox of Grove Hill and Penjerricks, Falmouth Cornwall, is the present head of the family. His landed estate is a very considerable one. The Estate of Penjerricks, many years ago, was developed as an arboretum and on it one finds rare specimens of shrubs and trees from Tasmania, New Zealand, the United States, and other places. Huge tree ferns are placed together with Sequoia Gigantia, the "big trees" of California, and the Rhodadendrons of half a dozen climes are shown in company with our native variety of the Appalachian mountains.

ELLICOTT OF DEVONSHIRE AND MARYLAND.

The difficulties surrounding an examination into the origins of this name are so great that it is unlikely that much light will ever be shed upon it beyond the early part of the seventeenth century when the record of the American Ellicotts begins.

The Right Reverend Charles John Ellicott, 'late Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, Chairman of the Committee for the Revision of the New Testament, whose Gothic monument may be seen in Gloucester Cathedral; and of whom it is said that out of four hundred meetings of the committee, he attended three hundred and ninety-eight,—is authority for the statement that the Ellicotts were a clan in south west England and that there is a church back of Dartmore where may be found numbers of mediaeval brasses of the name, possibly at Bratton-Clovelly. The name is a biblical one in origin, being derived from Elias, the prophet, a very popular saint in the middle ages when the adoption of surnames became common. The ending, -cott, is nothing more than a "diminutive," as is the -ot in Eliot, found in French and English. The two names are interchangeable, and one finds the son or daughter of an Ellicott given as Elliott, or vice versa, in church records of marriages or baptisms.

Thomas Elyat of Exeter, in the sixteenth century, left a house with a beautiful mullioned front running through three stories to the Church, and a Bishop of Exeter, when he built a library at the Palace, removed it bodily and attached it to his new building.

Elyat is, of course, one of the many modifications of the original name of Elicot or Eliot, as found in the Harlean MSS.

The Earls of St. Germans (Cornwall) are Eliots, and some of their monuments may be seen at the chapel of the great house.

This family flourished, says Burke, for several generations in Devonshire before its removal to Cornwall. John Eliot an ancestor, married Joan, daughter of John Bonville of Shute.

Sir John Eliot of Port Eliot, in Cornwall, M. P. and knight, committed to the Tower for "undutiful speeches"—and afterward because he was one of the managers of the impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham,—is singled out by John Foster, the constitutional historian, as "the most illustrious confessor of the cause of liberty of the time of Charles I." He died a prisoner in the Tower of London. From him the Barons and Earls of St. Germans are descended.

The secretary of the Devon and Cornwall Record Society writes that the church records at Culmpton of the seventeenth century, having been destroyed, it is, so far, impossible to link the Ellicotts of that place with the Exeter family which rose to a position of prominence about 1590, when Henrie Ellacott and his son, George, were successively Governors of the Merchants Venturers Guild and Sheriffs of the city, though they had investments in Culmpton and the period would seem to indicate it.

Their arms are given in the Herald's Visitation of 1620: Lozengy, Or and Azure, a Bordure Gules, while to the Ellicotts of Culmpton has been scribed, by the author of the Families of Fox, Ellicott and Evans, by Mr. Charles W. Evans of Buffalo, N. Y., the same shield, except that Sable takes the place of Azure. The crest of the Culmpton family, is given as an oak tree, with the motto: Sto Super Vias Antiquas. This may have been an earlier arms, locally used, and those confirmed to the Ellacotts of Exon in 1620, with a "difference," replacing sable with azure, just as the spelling of the name is slightly changed by the use of an a to take the place of i in the correct manner. This spelling, however, was not recognized by the Herald.

Thus we begin with the research of Dr. R. Hingston Fox, of London, made in 1911. He finds the Ellicotts in the valleys of the Exe, the Clist and the Culm in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries under various spellings, and in the Culm valley they were generally engaged in the manufacture of cloth and allied industries.

The will of John Ellicot of Culmpton was probated in 1677 and lists considerable property in houses, goods and money. Robert Ellicot, the brother, was a merchant and was born about the year 1615. They were both sons of an earlier Robert. He was one of the earliest Friends and showed great zeal for his faith and the protection and encouragement of his fellows in his religion at a time when this entailed severe and repeated persecutions.

The Friends had rediscovered "passive resistance" and, wherever they were at this period, the jails swarmed with them.

Under Charles II, Robert Ellicot spent several months in prison until he was released under the king's proclamation.

He opened his house for worship regularly during the hottest persecution under the Conventicle Act, and for marriages, of which there were several certificates dated at his house. He suffered the distraint of his goods for his steadfast adherence to liberty of worship, besides further imprisonment under the later acts of Parliament. The "Sufferings of Friends" give numerous instances of persistent opposition to the abuses, judicial and otherwise, of a time to which we look back with something less than pride.

The harshness of the law of those days is indicated by the fact that there were on the statutes at least one hundred minor offences for which a child, a woman or a man might be executed; and the maimings, the filthy prisons with their barbarous administration were a by word among those who were cognizant of their abuse. The Westminster Review in an article in 1869 has to say: "Without derogating from the high stand maintained by other bodies of Discenters, we think there is not one among them who will not yield the palm to the 'persistent Quakers' as the foremost champions of civil and religious liberty." Robert Ellicot survived his wife Mary nearly fifty years and died in 1712 at 97 years of age. He leaves his house in Culmpton to his daughter and her husband, Thomas Lake, during their lives and afterward to his son Andrew, who had taken up the cloth making industry. Andrew's name is found among those of Friends imprisoned in Exeter goal, in 1683. He married, in 1677 Elizabeth Hodge, of Zealmanacord parish. It was his eldest son Andrew who married Mary Fox, daughter of Francis Fox (2) of St. Germans, whose mother was Tabitha Croker, daughter of George Croker Esq'r of Lineham and Plymouth. This Andrew Ellicott emigrated to Bucks County, Penna., in 1730 in company with his son Andrew who became the progenitor of the Ellicotts of Bucks County, Penna., and of Maryland. He married Ann Bye, daughter of Nathaniel Bye of Buckingham, of an influential family of landowners, but the succeeding generation had a hard struggle since they were orphaned when their father died in 1741. Their mother married George Wall, an Englishman, by whom she had a son, George Wall, Jr., who attained to position as a man of scientific knowledge, a member of the American Philosophical Society and "Colonel-Lieutenant" of Bucks County. He was interested with the Ellicotts in the foundation of Ellicotts Mills in Maryland.

Andrew Ellicott and Ann Bye had five sons, Joseph, Andrew, Nathaniel, Thomas and John. In recompense to a benefactor, Samuel Armitage, who seems to have stood in the place of guardian in their early youth, they persuaded him to build a mill (they had all been trained in mechanical occupations which gave them a mastery over mechanical problems and an outlet for their undoubted genius in this department of knowledge). Mr. Armitage afterward acknowledged his indebtedness, saying that the "Ellicott boys" had made him comfortable for life.

Joseph Ellicott, the eldest, born 1732, married Judith, daughter of Samuel Bleaker and Sarah, his wife. In 1766, he sailed from Philadelphia in the ship "Hibernia" to visit England and to receive his greatgrandfather's estate in Culmpton, which amounted to the substantial sum of 1500 pounds Sterling. He visited his relatives, the Foxes in Plymouth and in St. Germans and found them "both agreeable and learned."

In July 1757, he sailed by the "Charming Rachel" for Philadelphia, requiring fifty two days for the voyage. He was High Sheriff of Bucks County, Penna., in 1768-9. He rose to eminence in the arts and sciences, particularly in the art of clock making and mechanical pursuits, and was the companion of Rittenhouse and Franklin. His musical clock is still famous. It has four faces, records the movement of the celestial bodies, the hours, minutes and seconds, and the years, for one century. It also plays twenty-nine tunes of pre-Revolutionary times.

His descendants are numerous and the most famous of the American Ellicotts was his eldest son, Andrew, of West Point Military Academy, variously known as the Astronomer and the Surveyor. In the Philadelphia Directory and Register of 1794, he is listed as the Geographer General of the United States. He had two other sons, Joseph and Benjamin, who established the Holland Land Company whose holdings bounded on lakes Erie and Ontario, and the Niagara River and covered what are now eight counties of the state of New York. Their headquarters were at Batavia where there are interesting relics, and both Joseph and Benjamin became rich men; but being bachelors, their wealth descended to the children of Andrew, the Astronomer, and other relatives.

Andrew led an exceedingly active and useful life. He was Major of the Elkridge Company. He surveyed parts of the boundaries of several of the original states, including that between Canada and the United States near the Niagara river, and the southern boundary of New York. He and David Rittenhouse continued the Mason and Dixon line, from a point near Cumberland, Md., west, to the south-west corner of Pennsylvania, and then ran the west line north to Lake Erie. He surveyed the boundaries of the District of Columbia, assisting Major Pierre l'Enfant by running lines for his plan of the city of Washington, and later, on the recommendation of President Washington, replaced l'Enfant in planning the city. He has left as a memorial to his work, a Journal covering the four years from 1796 to 1800, when he was engaged in the survey of the boundary between the Spanish and American possessions, now the northern boundary of Florida; an intensely interesting story of how the Spanish king, in spite of the new treaty, gave secret instructions to his representatives to frustrate the running of the boundary line, and how his patience, prudence and good will triumphed and averted hostilities with the Indians who were secretly set upon the small party in the swamps and rivers along the route. He died at the end of his service as the first professor of mathematics at the West Point Military Academy, in 1828.

Andrew and Ann Bye Ellicott had a son, Andrew, who married (1) Elizabeth Brown and by her had eight children, the eldest being Jonathan, born 1756.

He married (2) Esther Brown, a cousin of Elizabeth, and had by her six children, among them Thomas, born 1777, father of William M. Ellicott of Montrose, Md.

Jonathan married Sarah Harvey, whose daughter Letitia married Thomas R. Fisher of Philadelphia in 1829, whose ancestor left numerous descendants and had large grants of land from the Penns. From this marriage are descended the Fisher connection of Wakefield, the Carpenters of Germantown and the Foxs of Wakefield and Foxburg, Pennsylvania.

Ellicott's Mills (now Ellicott City) was founded in 1772 by Andrew and John Ellicott, sons of Andrew and Ann (Bye) Ellicott. They studied their problem thoroughly and had found a convenient and adequate water power adjacent to a rich farming country where they were to be the first to introduce wheat growing, the Maryland planters having confined themselves almost exclusively to tobacco raising for shipment to Europe. They effected an arrangement with Charles Carroll of Carrollton by which he was to plant a large acreage in wheat and they were to build a road from the mills to his estate at Doughoregan Manor. Flour was also shipped from Elkridge Landing and merchandise brought from England on the return voyage.

During the period of the Revolution the Ellicotts barely sustained themselves, but with peace in 1783, prosperity was resumed and, what with improvements in the mills, wharves in Baltimore with extensive warehouses and a wider market, the fortunes of the family were established. Joseph, Andrew and John Ellicott transacted business as Ellicott and Company, and Ellicotts Mills took on the appearance of a business and social community. The Ellicott graveyard and the old Meeting House stand on a precipitate hill near the Washington road overlooking the gorge of the Patapsco, reminding one of Devonshire scenery, and in the graveyard are to be seen the graves of the founders and numerous others of the family. They intermarried with the well known Tyson family and were associated with them in business.

The Ellicotts had also iron mills and Thomas Ellicott, the son of Andrew Ellicott, was president of the Union Bank of Baltimore. John H. B. Latrobe the famous engineer and architect of the United States capitol, was one of his directors.

In his Life of Mr. Latrobe, the late John E. Semmes quotes him as follows: "By far the most remarkable person here was the late Thomas Ellicott, a man of rare qualities, of extraordinary intelligence, and as fit to command an army as to determine questions of bank policy. His physique was remarkable. He must have been six feet four inches; a great, thin, broad-shouldered person with a massive square brow, shadowing deep sunk eyes that lit up a face whose complexion was a pale, unhealthy one, with a stern determination. A heavy jaw and tightly compressed lips made firmness and iron will the characteristics of his countenance.

"His stride was corresponding to his height; and strangers turned as he passed to look at the commanding person of Thomas Ellicott.

"Eleven men were on the Board, but it was Mr. Ellicott's will that swayed their actions. He was born in 1777 and died in 1859.

"There were few men that the late Roger B. Taney had more regard for than Mr. Ellicott."

However, prior to 1837, a combination was formed against Thomas Ellicott, and fortune turned against the Ellicotts of this line.

Thomas Ellicott married Mary Miller, daughter of William and Ann Emlin Miller of Avondale, Chester County, Pennsylvania. The Avondale grant from William Penn had been one of 12,000 acres. Mary Miller inherited large farms and a house in the Dutch Colonial style built in 1731, where the family subsequently resided. Their son, William Miller Ellicott, born in 1807, married Sarah Cresson Poultney of Baltimore, daughter of Thomas and Ann Poultney. In our day when cultural matters have, to some extent, been obscured by material expansion, the following note set in the back of a heavy gold watch of the period, made by J. Tobias of Liverpool, is interesting: "My father gave me this watch as a reward for translating the New Testament from Greek and writing it out in English; which I did, beginning the same 1st. mo. 30th 1821 and ending it 9th mo. 9th 1822. This manuscript is among my father's papers at Avondale, Chester Co., Penna. (dated) 5/5/1829. W. M. Ellicott."

The manuscript, too, is carefully preserved, together with a card given him by his loving instructors, the Sulpician Fathers at St. Mary's Seminary, for diligent study and good deportment. He had sufficient command of the Greek language at the age of fourteen years to undertake this translation!

Of the eight daughters of Thomas Ellicott, Elizabeth married James S. Pike, of Calais, Maine, in 1855. He was the Washington Correspondent of the New York Tribune, was given a position in the South in reconstruction days, which he resigned to write a denunciatory book about the abuses in the south. He had been made U. S. Minister to Holland by President Lincoln.

William M. Ellicott and Sarah Poultney Ellicott, of Montrose, Baltimore, Co., Md., had issue, Thomas, William, Lindley, David, Lewis and Mary. Thomas married Caroline Allen and had issue: Thomas, Francis A., Susan, Sarah P., William, Rachel and Nancy P.

The second son, William M. Ellicott, Jr., married in Philadelphia 1860, Nancy Morris Ellis, daughter of Charles and Mary Luke (Morris) Ellis, who was grand-daughter of Captain Samuel Morris of Revolutionary fame.

The Murrays of Rockburn and Eubank, Howard County, Md., are descended from this family, also, through the marriage of Anthony Morris with his second wife Elizabeth Hudson in 1752. Dr. Thomas Morris Murray, born at Rockburn 1851, married 1900, Eleanor Vinton Clark. They reside at their place, Gwyn Careg, at Pomfret, Conn., and at Boston, Mass. The Chestons of West River, Maryland, are also descended from Anthony Morris. Samuel Morris, son of Anthony Morris by his first wife Sarah Powel, was born at Philadelphia 1734; died 1812. He was descended from Anthony Morris (2), of London, the immigrant, whose family became active in the affairs of the colony of Pennsylvania, sometimes in opposition to the Penns, and which produced several members of the Provincial Assembly and two colonial mayors of Philadelphia, and were otherwise distinguished. At the beginning of the Revolution he was appointed Captain of the First Troop, Philadelphia Light Horse, the famous "City Troop" of our time, and commanded it throughout the war, being present at the battles of Princeton, Brandywine, Monmouth and Germantown. During the terrible winter of 1777 at Valley Forge they were present and serving as Life Guards to General Washington. In the memorial chapel at that historic place there is a memorial to him with his likeness, after St. Memin, carved in the oak of the choir stalls. The site of the camp is shown near the headquarters of General Washington. Morris was a member of the Committee of Safety, the Council of Safety, the Provincial Assembly, the General Assembly, the Committee of Grievances and the Navy Board. He was also Governor of the "State in Schuylkill" or Fish House Club, the oldest social club in the country; and Master of the Gloucester Fox Hounds, now the Rose Tree Hunt, each for periods of forty-five years. It is interesting to note that his descendant, Major Effingham B. Morris, Jr., who distinguished himself at the capture of Mont Faucon in the Great War by the American forces, is the present commander of the City Troop.

The Morris House at 225 So. Eighth Street in Philadelphia is one of the few remaining houses of the Revolutionary period still in use by the same family and in its original condition and appearance. It is owned by Effingham B. Morris and is occupied by his son, Major Effingham B. Morris, Jr., as his winter residence.

Samuel Morris married in St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia,

SAMUEL MORRIS OF PHILADELPHIA, DIED 1812.

AFTER ST. MEMIN.

1755, Rebecca Wistar, daughter of Caspar Wistar and sister of the Revolutionary surgeon, who figured notably at the battle of Germantown and for whom the flowering vine, Wistaria, is named.

One of his sons was Luke Morris, who married Ann Pancoast, whose daughter Mary Luke Morris married Charles Ellis of Philadelphia, the well known philanthropist, born 1800 and died 1874.

Charles Ellis was descended from Thomas Ellis, Gentleman of Merionethshire, Wales, who emigrated from Pembrokeshire to Philadelphia in 1680, after suffering persecution, indignities and imprisonment for conscience sake. He became Registrar General of the colony and a member of the committee of three who were appointed to govern it under William Penn. He was a man of wealth and made investments in property in Philadelphia and elsewhere in Pennsylvania.

Nancy Morris Ellis daughter of Charles Ellis (great grandson of Thomas Ellis) and Mary Luke Ellis, married William M. Ellicott, Jr., of Baltimore in 1860. Their children were, Charles Ellis Ellicott and William M. Ellicott, of Baltimore, and Mary M. E. Hess, Edith Ellicott Powers and Lydia E. Morris, of Philadelphia. Their descendants are numerous. The family occupied the homestead of the Ellis family in the Muncy Valley, Pennsylvania, near the west branch of the Susquehanna river, which was built about 1810, destroyed by the Iroquois Indians and rebuilt in 1812. William Ellis, father of Charles Ellis, married Merey Cox, of Deer Creek, Md., whose mother was of the influential Goldhawk family having large estates near London. On the occasion of the incursion of the Iroquois, William Ellis rode many miles along the Susquehannah, in the direct path of its advance, to warn the inhabitants and to bring the women and children to the frontier fort at Muncy where he cared for them during this foray which caused such havoc in the new settlements.

Charles E. Ellicott of Baltimore and his wife, Madelene Le Moyne Ellicott have two son. C. Ellis Ellicott, Jr., who married

Anne, daughter of the Right Rev. John Gardner Murray, late Bishop of Maryland, and Dr. Valcoulon Le M. Ellicott, who married Mary, daughter of Clarendon I. T. Gould, a member of a well known Canadian family, residing in Baltimore. His brother William M. Ellicott (3rd) married; first Elizabeth Tabor King, daughter of Francis T. King, the philanthropist and financier; and, second, Anna Goldthwaite Campbell, daughter of Duncan G. Campbell, who was son of Mr. Justice John A. Campbell, of the U. S. Supreme Court, her mother being Ella Calvert, of Riversdale, descended from the Lords Baltimore of Woodcote, Surrey, England, Proprietors of the Palatinate of Maryland.

Other descendants of Thomas Ellicott and Mary Miller Ellicott of Avondale, Pa., and of their son William Miller Ellicott, of Montrose, Baltimore County, Md., are: the family of the late Mrs. Arthur Steuart, Mrs. Francis A. White, Mrs. C. Prevost Boyce, Colonel and Mrs. Walter Sturgill, U. S. A.; William H. Ellicott, the family of C. Lewis Ellicott and Lily Thompson Ellicott, his wife, and the late Major William M. Roberts, U. S. Army, whose widow and heir is Ella Prendergast Roberts, of Baltimore Co., Md.

NOTE: All the facts about the descendants of Andrew Ellicott and Ann Bye of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, may be found in the book of Mr. Charles W. Evans, Buffalo, N. Y., entitled, The Biographical and Historical Account of the Families of Fox, Ellicott, Evans and Others.

CLAIBORNE vs. CLOBERY ET ALS.
IN THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

About William Claiborne there has been waged by historians a long and bitter controversy. His acts and motives have frequently been the subject of discussion. Those interested in the interpretation of Claiborne's career will find the conflicting views summed up by Dr. John Herbert Claiborne in his "Life of William Claiborne."

The account of the litigation which follows is taken from the High Court of Admiralty records on file at the Public Record Office in London. The suit grew out of a joint stock or partnership agreement involving Clobery & Company and William Claiborne, their partner and agent in America, for the purpose of establishing a fur trading post on Kent Island. The terms of the partnership agreement are stated in each allegation. It will be seen from even a casual reading of the proceedings which follow that they are much more than a record of a law case. The reader can, if he wishes, form his own judgment of the merits of the case, that is, whether or not Claiborne had properly accounted at Kent Island for the proceeds of the joint stock agreement. Far more important however and the real reason for the publication of these records is the light they shed upon the first white settlement within the bounds of Maryland. These Admiralty Court proceedings are really a chronicle not only of Kent Island but of the similar conditions that existed at St. Mary's. In other words, the student conversant with the first volumes of our Archives descriptive of the life of our pioneers at St. Mary's will notice how much alike the conditions were at Kent Island. The only difference is that the reader of the Archives must dig very patiently for the same information which is more vividly set forth in the court records which will be published in this and subsequent issues of the magazine.

The first of these Admiralty Court records taken from the Examination of Pirates will recall the picturesque though sanguinary conflicts in the Pocomoke River between the rival pinnaces of Lord Baltimore and Claiborne.

Then follows Libel 98, no. 278, in which is set forth Clobery & Company's complaint against Claiborne. There will be found an interesting account of the sailing of the ship "Africa," Isaac Watlington, Master, "laded . . . with goods, wares and merchandises" for the common account of the partners. According to Clobery not only the "Africa" but also the ships "Defense," "James" and "Revenge" had been sent loaded with supplies to Kent Island, for which goods it was alleged Claiborne had failed to render an account. The High Court of Admiralty proceedings Miscellaneous Books 853 and 854 contain Claiborne's personal answer to each allegation in Clobery & Company's libel.

Claiborne, however, was not satisfied with merely answering the charges against him but himself instituted a suit based on exactly the same set of facts against Clobery & Company. This case is set forth in Libel 98, no. 318, and Libel 100, no. 63. Claiborne describes how on Kent Island in the month of April 1631 "there happened a violent and sudden fire in the store houses where almost all the goods belonging to the said joint stock were placed and putt, by means whereof . . . the goods were consumed and burnt in his absence." Claiborne contended that Clobery & Company had failed to send supplies to the islanders with the result that "the people there have indured much want and misery being in danger to be destroyed by the Indians for want of men and municon." At one place Captain Claiborne in an interesting account of the hazards involved in the trade with the Indians described how they usually "traded in a shallopp or small pinnace being six or seven Englishmen encompassed by two or three hundred Indians."

With Libel 100, no. 63, Claiborne attaches a detailed "account of disbursements at Kent Island" from which can be obtained a splendid idea of the food-stuffs, farm implements, arms, and other articles used by the early Kent Islanders. Even more important is the list of persons employed on Kent Island from 1631-1636 with their occupation stated, whether "trader, sawyer and seaman." Clobery & Company's answers to Claiborne's suit will be found in Miscellaneous Books no. 854.

George Evelyn who was sent out by Clobery & Company to relieve Claiborne of his command at Kent Island states his version of the case in Miscellaneous Books no. 854. Then follows the testimony of witnesses summoned to testify regarding the Kent Island fur trading post. Messers. Grinder, Turtle and Maurice Thompson are among those who give a realistic account of the conditions at Kent Island. Their testimony will be found in Miscellaneous Books nos. 276 and 277.

MAXIMILIAN GODEFROY TO LOUIS H. GIRARDIN.

Richmond G—7tre, 1816
Mercredi Soir.

Vous voyez par cette date, Monsieur et digne ami, que le retard qu'a éprouvé notre départ nous a déjà privé de l'espoir de voir réalisé un des plaisirs que nous nous etions promis dans notre projet d'excursion; celui de voir le philosophe de Monticelo; je commence à craindre un autre désappointement qui m'affligerai beaucoup; je veux dire de ne plus vous trouver dans notre route si nous ne pouvons partir dimanche matin comme je l'avais décidé. Mais quels que soient les efforts que j'ai faits et qui en vérité ont Epuisé le reste de mes forces; je me vois arrivé à la fin de mon mercredi ayant encore de l'ouvrage par dessus les yeux. Ne concluez par delà pourtant que je fasse fortune ici. Le prestige s'est éclipsé depuis 19 jours; car lorsqu'il a été question D'Argent, et pour les Banques et pour la Court House cet Esprit mercantile, qui accable le génie et la délicatesse, s'est montré aussi rude et aussi hydeux ici qu'ailleurs. Des deux cents gourdes que j'espérais pour les dessins des Banques, on m'en a envoyé cent—pour prévenir ma demande. Des deux cents gourdes qui j'ai demandés après avoir été officiellement questionné sur ce que je demanderais, on m'a rabbattu ignoblement 50$—le doct^r Brockenborough m'a cependant dit qu'il ne pensait pas que cette différence put être un objet de difficulté—mais quoiqu'il en soit je compte bien être traité Baltimoriquement ici, comme dans le lieu de ma résidence; cela me décourage; parcequ'il résulte de cet essay fait dans un Etat où les manieres sont plus grandes, qu'on n'y sait pas mieux apprécier ce qu'il en coûte pour acquérir des Talens, et qu'on n'y sait pas qu'il n'est pas donné a chacun d'aller à Corinthe. L'ouvrage que j'ai entrepris pour les réparations interieures et exterieures, et pour les plantations et clôture du Square n'est fini que d'aujourd'hui. Si encore avec l'excès de travail que cela m'a causé je n'avais pas a trembler qu'aussitot que j'aurais le dos tourné, Paine, le surintendant, qui ne peut me tromper. Sur son caractère et ses dispositions secrettes, n'employe tous les moyens possibles ou pour disputer de mes travaux, ou pour multiplier les obstacles, ou pour faire le Docteur et qu'enfin ce qui Sera Exécuté ne le Soit mal; Si, dis-je, je n'avais pas ce plan de cabale trop clairement développé dedans ma prévoyance, je me consolerais aisément de la mauvaise affaire que j'ai faite en venant ici pour une somme si indigne.

Mais quand je m'exprime ainsi, je Sais que le gouverneur avait les mains liés Sur ce chapitre, et qu'il a manifesté lui même le chagrin de me voir entraîné à un Si mauvais travail pour une Si misérable Compensation. Aussi mes plaintes ne portent point Sur cet objet. Mais je ne Serais pas Surpris que les gens qui Savent que je ne puis de louer Liberalité ne me decrient peutêtre pour Sauver leur lezinerie.

Je Suis tourmenté de Sortir d'ici, d'abord parceque j'y Succombe Sous le poids du travail, par une saison fatigante, et aussi par l'impatience ou je me sens d'être persécuté 5 ou 6 fois par jour pour fournir des détails qui ne peuvent être donnés qu'après que le tout ensemble est en Harmonie—comme si j'avais quelques paires d'yeux et de mains de rechange—ce qui demande plus particulièrement de la patience, c'est non pas L'ignorance de ceux qui croyent que tout cela se jette en moule; mais c'est la malice de ceux qui venant tomber sur mon dos 40 fois dans une Semaine et me trouvant chaque fois absorbé dans mon travail et tout en nage, n'en contiennent pas moins leurs impertinentes indiscretions et leurs demandes fatigantes.

C'en est assez de mes Boutades—mais Si j'ai a revenir à Richmond, ce ne Sera pas au même prix—j'observerai au Surplus pour L'Honneur de la virginie dont la réputation est noble au loin qu'il est vrai qu'en ce moment la ville est presque déserte et que par consequent les arts y sont abandonné au mob.

Je me réjouis, et Ma^{de} G. partage Sincèrement ces Sentimens en apprenant par votre Lettre de Walburn, de 25 dernier, que votre Santé S'est raffermie Si vite et si bien—peutêtre le parti que vous avez pris d'acheter votre ferme pour y passer désormais vos Etés est il un plan Salutaire. Si malgré la Salubrité générale, elle n'est pas placée dans quelque Site qui puisse y faire exception—mais vous Savez mieux que moi ce qu'il vous faut et ce qu'il a été bon de faire; aussi j'Espère que ce tout est pour le mieux.

Au moment où je vous écris il m'est encore impossible de pouvoir être sûr de partir dimanche—dans tous les cas vendredi prochain (en 8) nous Serons certainement dans le Stage. Si donc vous ne nous voyez pas par le Stage de dimanche vous pouvez être sûr de nous rencontrer par le Suivant, car je n'entreprendrai rien de plus pour le moment. Si l'occasion S'en presentait, tant je suis excédé.

Well—Si vos Gens de Staunton veulent un plan de Capitol, de ville etc., en revenant du pont naturel je leur donnerai tout le tems qu'ils désireront: mais pourvû qu'on me traite plus Liberalement que je ne l'a été à Richmond. J'ai accepté les conditions de Richmond pour reprendre à la Confiance du gouvernement et pour avoir une occasion de voir cette ville et de m'y faire mieux connaitre—maintenant il faut que la virginie m'emploie pour le Chapitre de la marmite—à tout hazard permettez moi de vous prier de parler de moi à vos paysans.

S'il n'y a pas d'indiscrétion nous nous presenterons toujours à Monticelo et si nous n'y pouvons rencontrer le propriétaire nous Saluerons du souvenir Le genius loci.

Il est minuit—depuis 19 jours ou 3 Semaines je n'ai point de repos ne pouvant dormir pendant mes nuits—cependant quelque plaisir que j'eusse a prolonger ma veillée ici avec vous comme cette Lettre est assez longue je vais la terminer beaucoup plutôt que je ne le voudrais—ce ne Sera pas toutefois sans vous presenter les voeux et les complimens de M^{me} G. et de notre Eliza, qui a passé la journée avec Miss Cole et vos petites—quant à moi, j'espère que vous me connaissez assez déjà pour croire au vif intérêt que m'inspire tout ce qui vous concerne, et par conséquent a L'extrême désir que j'ai de vous revoir pour vous réiterer personnellement L'assurance du respectueux attachement avec lequel je suis toujours,

Mon cher et excellent ami votre dévoué,

quand nous nous reverrons nous parlerons Ecoles militaires—puis des nuages qui couvrent L'Horizon politique—puis des malheurs qui Eprouvent L'amerique du Sud, quand elle pourrait être si grande.

J'ai fait à Miss Cole votre recommandation sur l'Histoire de Virginie, je vais la lui rappeler et quand elle l'aura retirée de chez M. Wirt, et que nous partirons je m'en chargerai avec plaisir.

BOOK NOTE.

Old Baltimore. By Annie Leakin Sioussat. Published under the auspices of Maryland Society of the Colonial Dames of America, in honor of the author. New York: Macmillan Co., 1931.

In honoring the author of this volume, the Maryland Society of the Colonial Dames have honored themselves by adding yet another volume to the historical works heretofore published under their auspices. "This is the story of Baltimore's first century, from its founding in 1729 to the Centennial Anniversary. These first hundred years were stirring times, covering as they did the struggles of the early settlers, French and Indian conflict, the Revolution, and the War of 1812. Gallant worthies in scarlet velvet and powdered wigs, generals with clanking spurs, statesmen whose names made early American history, lovely ladies who shone at balls—all these played their part in bringing about the glory of Baltimore.

Much of the material of this book has been taken from authentic stories handed down in old Baltimore families, letters cherished for a century and a half, old diaries and public records. Baltimore's sturdy beginnings, her early churches, her schools, her social life, her commerce, her fine estates—these mark the metamorphosis of the straggling village of Baltimore Town into an important city.

Old Baltimore is the most substantial contribution to local history in many years, and it is essentially a social history, in the wider sense. As is shown by the extensive bibliography (pp. 227-238) the narrative has been skilfully woven from many and diverse sources, the whole making a vivid picture of life as it was during the earlier years of our city's being. A few slips in proof reading have been noticed, especially in the matter of personal names, but none of any great moment. In a recent review it was suggested that the story of the migrations of Baltimore Town was borrowed from Scharf. As a matter of fact this story written for and read before the Maryland Historical Society by the Rev. George Armistead Leakin some years before it was borrowed, without credit, by Scharf!

This book is a welcome addition to our Marylandia and will doubtless find a permanent place among our lesser Archives.
